interested in joining the army when he gets out. He's had enough of the military life-style. Robert's life-style will be incorporated into every dorm in the next 20 days. Right now, there are about 60-80 juveniles in a dorm with two guards. Rachele Lehner, coordinator of Community Service Programs at USC, had a good experience volunteering at DJJ last February. She was there with a group of international students who were uncomfortable at first.

"We played basketball with about 50-60 boys. The international students didn't know how to play basketball and there was one girl in particular. The boys from DJJ made everyone stop moving whenever the girl shot the ball. So, we had a real positive experience out there," Lehner said. Today's One Shot program will be from 1 to 4 p.m. Students should meet in front of Russell House. The next One Shot will be Nov. 17.

Tawanda Jones, a freshman studying chemistry, has similar thoughts. "It's more of an individual's effort to work things out," she said. "I would talk to anyone. I can really get along with anyone." Both Jones and Hun think problems between blacks and whites are learned by people as they grow up. Jones said there are minorities of whites and blacks, especially from small towns, who have for generations had negative values instilled in them. "It helps it when these people come to college and live together, maybe some blacks in one dorm room and some whites next door," Jones said. "They'll get first-hand experience of what each is like, instead of getting their information through rumors. By the time they're seniors, they'll have different values."

S.C. Higher Education Commission puts off possible merger vote

Associated Press

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Possible merger of the University of South Carolina's five branches with the state's technical colleges was postponed Thursday by the state Higher Education Commission.

Instead, a task force will look at the progress made by both sides and report back in February.

This summer, Commissioner Fred Sheheen and his staff recommended merging the university's two-year campuses with the state's 16 technical colleges. The recommendation was in response to a study of two-year education completed in May 1994.

"The profile of a student who goes through a two-year college is quite different than a student who goes through a technical school," said Fred Day, commission chairman. "There's a market for both."

Day said the solution may simply be better coordination between USC and the technical schools.

"I think it really is a communication problem," he said.

Residents in the five communities with two-year USC branches and technical schools have opposed any combinations. Sumter and Beaufort area officials have been particularly vocal opponents.

"I'm relieved that we don't have to fight that battle at this time," said state Sen. Holly Cork, R-Hilton Head Island. There is no question that Beaufort County would suffer from a merger."

Cork said it's hard to be too hopeful about the futures of USC-Beaufort and the Technical College of the Lowcountry.

"Someone wants to see this merger occur. I don't know if it's Mr. Sheheen," she said.

"Fred Sheheen is out of step with higher education in South Carolina and should resign," said state Sen. Phil Leventis, D-Sumter. "The issue's been studied to death."

Day will appoint at least two commission members to serve on the task force along with Sheheen. USC Provost James Moeser and Michael McCall, executive director of the state Board for Technical and Comprehensive Education, also will serve.

Moeser and McCall said they don't want to see the systems merged, either.

But Moeser said the schools should be warned not to duplicate facilities like libraries when the schools are close to each other. "Planning for the future needs to be consolidated," he said.

The 1994 report said students should pay the same tuition, whether they go to a two-year USC branch or a technical school. A tuition change would require legislative approval, Moeser said.

"We know that it's going to take some time in order to cause the types of collaboration that need to be done with USC and state tech," McCall said.
