restarting it in 1999 with all new members was the best solution. When the chapter is restarted, the national office will be able to redirect the fraternity to fit the goals and ideals of the national office.

USC administrators who worked with the fraternity see the decision as having mixed effects on the future. Director of Student Life Jerry Brewer said restarting the fraternity with all new members was the best solution.

"I know there's a future for the fraternity, and we must move on from the unpleasantness of the past," Brewer said. "When the current members graduate, we'll start the fraternity again with new standards, ideals and visions. You couldn't mix old and new members, because it would blur the standards."

As Brewer commented on the potential for the fraternity to rebuild, he expressed a personal sadness over the loss of the fraternity; he was a member of Pi Kappa Phi while an undergraduate at USC.

"On a more personal basis, it's sad because I know the personal time and energy some put into the fraternity," Brewer said. "I know what the fraternity stood for and meant, and that's not what it was in the end, but I know things will be different in the future."

Brewer suggested, as the national president of Pi Kappa Phi, the importance the national office places on standards.

"It's important to have standards. When an individual or group doesn't live up to these standards, the national office is required to disaffiliate them," Brewer said. "I think this action speaks strongly, that the fraternity has standards and morals. The university does the same with the Carolina Creed."

Since the fraternity decided to give up its charter, most of the members have moved off the hall on McBryde Quad. Currently, four members live on the hall but are working with the housing office to relocate elsewhere on campus.

The Office of Greek Life has not made any decision on which fraternity will move into the space on McBryde Quad, said Mary Beth Holzbach, director of Greek Life.

"There is a Greek review committee that is responsible for making a recommendation to myself about the allocation of space in McBryde Quad and South Tower. They will meet in February and start the process," Holzbach said.

There is a waiting list of fraternities wanting to get onto the Quad. Fraternities must meet a number of criteria, including having enough members to fill the hall, before they can move there. Holzbach didn't know if the empty space would be filled this spring or if another fraternity would wait until next fall to move in.

CAMP

Dozer encouraged the involvement and awareness of the community. In Dennis Dozer's speech on World AIDS day he told the audience to unite and fight the disease.

"We, as college students, have a really good opportunity to help out because we're young enough and silly enough to show the kids a good time and relate to the kids, and we're old enough to accept the responsibility of working with these kids," said Sarah Efrid, College Volunteer Coordinator and Advertising freshman.

"After being a staff member of the Sue Kuhlen's camp for kids all of the AIDS stereotypes I had were broken down immediately because the little kids were so full of life and love," said Brian Rish, a Camp for Kids volunteer. "The only way I could tell that they were HIV positive is because I was told before hand. Although I'm not affected with HIV the whole camp experience gave me appreciation for life's little things—the things the kids won't have one day."

Immediate needs of the camp other than funds are art supplies, office supplies, toys, videos, cassettes and games.
