Technology Advisory Committee, which consists of representatives from each school who meet monthly, is searching for a vender to provide the new services.

Under the new proposal, students will have the option of subscribing to online services with a provider, chosen by the university. The students will be billed monthly for their accounts by the provider.

"Right now, the best vender we have found will provide and install all of the equipment here, and will charge each student approximately $12 a month for 60 hours online a month," Watson said.

"This is a very competitive rate,"

Watson did not name the vender in question, but said the vender would allow students to go online between midnight and 6 a.m. for free.

Students may always choose a different provider for online services, but Watson said students who use the university provider can take advantage of local resources, such as the USC home page and the library system, as well as the Internet with graphics, in the same system.

Currently, students have access to the Internet through the mainframe computer with assigned conversational monitor system (CMS) accounts, through which students send e-mail and browse the World Wide Web - but without the benefit of graphics.

Although plans are not yet finalized, an official policy change should be expected in the next few months.

"Right now, the system can only accommodate six or eight users at a time," Watson said. "People don't like dialing the old CMS."

to work directly with Indian tribes. He said he was surprised to see Native American students showing an interest in the class.

"Many of the students who have expressed an interest to me are themselves Indians, and they want to learn more about what they can do within their tribe to preserve their heritage," Pearson said. "This is one thing that kind of surprised me. I thought that the course might appeal to mainly people of European heritage, but it looks like we may even have an equal mix of people with Native American backgrounds and other backgrounds."

Pearson said the course "fit nicely" into the three weeks allotted for Maymester classes and was a different way of studying.

"Anyone who is interested in finding out more about Indians might enjoy the opportunity of meeting Indians and learning that they are real people," he said. "Students might be surprised to find out how much we actually owe to the people who were here before we arrived."

Maymester begins May 6 and continues through May 23. Registration for the May, Summer and Fall sessions begins April 1 for graduate students and April 9 for undergraduates. Briefs

NROTC No. 1 in nation

The Naval Reserve Officer Training Corps (NROTC) Unit at the University of South Carolina was recently recognized by the Navy for outstanding academic achievement during the Fall 1995 semester. The men and women of the NROTC unit achieved a 3.3 semester GPA, the highest of all NROTC units in the nation. Of the 110 total midshipmen in the program at USC, 74 percent achieved a fall GPA greater than 3.0.

Carolina Debate rises in national rankings

After participating in four competitions, Carolina Debate is now ranked 11 out of 200 in the United States. David Berube, Carolina Debate coach, is predicting they should rise as high as sixth.

Wisner said the pledges wore the uniforms to hand-deliver invitations for Kappa Alpha's annual Old South Ball.

"It's a show of Old South, not racism," Wisner said. "They (African-Americans) have every right to be offended. I can understand how they would be offended—it's like the flag issue. some view it as a sign of tradition, some as a symbol of a time of slavery. It all depends on the person."

Wisner also said more could be done on campus to bring blacks and whites together.

"There's so much separation," he said.

"People keep talking about wanting to be together, but we have to keep Fraternity Council together first."

Although the governing rules for the traditionally black NPHC and traditionally white NIC keep the two organizations from coming together as one, Wisner said the problem doesn't lie with the organizations.

It's not organizations; it's individuals," he said. "A lot of it is upbringing. Until people can accept each other as human beings, it's going to be hard to come together."

At a recent officer's training retreat,

Wisner said a good deal of time was spent on improving race relations.

"One focus of the weekend was, Don't leave this weekend with ideas and not act on them," he said.

The question remains, where is the starting point for the racial harmony many groups are talking about?

"The best place to start is to find an organization we (whites and African-Americans) can both contribute to," Wisner said.

Kappa Alpha is looking for a fundraising project or community service project it and a traditionally African-American fraternity could work on together, he said.

"We need somewhere we can get to know each other," he said.

Harrison agrees.

"There are a lot of things that need to be worked on, a lot of things that are kept secret and hush-hush," she said. "If we talk about the problems, it helps."

Although racism is a problem everywhere, McCray said people need to get past the hang-ups and stereotypes.

"You don't have to like everyone, but you need to try and understand them," she said.
