EMPLOYMENT TIP OF THE WEEK:

Brought to you by Employment Review and BestJobsUSA.com

Do your palms sweat in an interview when the hiring manager starts to poke around in your past and is about to uncover your deep dark secret that you've been fired from a past job? Are you about to bolt out of the chair? Stop! There are ways to continue your interview and have a successful outcome.

- Acknowledge your work history
- Be prepared to explain the circumstances
- Inform the interviewer what you learned from the experience

One thing you don't want to do is lie, get caught and ultimately eliminate yourself from the running.
