

Cartoonist expresses political views through art

The State political cartoonist Robert Ariail revealed his methods and motives when he spoke at Gambrell Hall on Wednesday evening.

"This is a particularly fun place to do cartoons," Ariail said. "There are so many wild and crazy political things happening here, and the readers are wild and crazy, too."

Ariail rattled on as he presented various cartoons ranging from topics as serious as Sept. 11 to the comical Clinton pot shot.

"I really miss President Clinton. He was a lot of fun," he said.

He later pulled out a cartoon from Wednesday's paper to reveal Chirac kissing Saddam Hussein's shoes.

"I could have made him kissing another part of the anatomy, but I didn't think it would be as appropriate for what we call a family newspaper," he said.

If any of his work was ever considered inappropriate, Ariail said he's received the message loud and clear.

"When people look at a cartoon I've done and they like it, they laugh, put the paper down and go about with whatever they're doing that day," he said. "But if somebody really gets pissed off, they sit down and write a letter and e-mail or call the publisher."

In the past, he said, feedback letters have included bits of scripture, and even the offending cartoon itself with his name penciled in beneath that particular cartoon's victim. Many factors contribute to the public perception of his work, he explained, especially since a picture can only spell out so much.

"The cartoon has to narrow its focus so much," Ariail said. The necessary hyperbole in a political cartoon results in a lot of unintended meanings, he said.

He also explained that his audience sometimes overlooks his role as a political commentator and thinks that he should be fair-minded and balanced, when, in essence, his cartoon is a "signed column."

"I don't feel like it's my role to try to convert people to what I'm saying, but I do think that I show them a different way of looking at an issue that maybe they hadn't considered, that maybe they will consider," he said.

Throughout his presentation, audience members — most of them dedicated fans — responded favorably.

"I thought he was great," said Laura Lipinski, a first-year international-studies student. "He was very informative about the process."

First-year history student Joseph Schmidt said that he was interested in learning about the newspaper in general. "I came to get a sense of what it's all about," he said.

"I thought it was a good explanation of the role of the cartoonist, which is often overlooked or misunderstood by the public," said Blease Graham, a USC political-science professor.

"Just being able to capture the idea the way he does provokes political discussion."

Despite such praise, Ariail himself feels his cartoons are simply humor masquerading as information. "I think I'm really more of an entertainer," he said. "I'm the jester of the page."

in touch with morality. Trask shelters Cathy after she is beaten by a man whose life she ruined. He has children by her, and when she ruins his life, they are set adrift. Those children, Caleb and Aaron, replay the story of Cain and Abel just as Charles and Adam Trask did in their youth. Steinbeck wrote in his journals that "East of Eden" was "the last book." You might not agree with all his conclusions, but the sprawling, massive "East of Eden" remains his masterwork.
