USC Upstate to build Greenville campus

USC Upstate announced Tuesday plans to build a free-standing Greenville campus on land to be donated by Greenville Technical College. The 13-acre site is valued at $1.5 million. The university expects to break ground on the first of three buildings in December.

"This is indeed an incredible day for the University of South Carolina Upstate," said John C. Stockwell, chancellor of USC Upstate. "This generous donation of land will allow the university to achieve substantial growth in the Greenville area and will make earning a four-year degree much more accessible to Greenville residents. USC Upstate will now establish its true academic presence in Greenville."

Snowden residence hall, 600 Main St.

Reporting officer L. Welch was dispatched in response to a complaint of possible drug activity. Complainant Morgan O'Donnell gave a description that matched subject No. 1, Timothy Clement, and upon contact, the subject began to quickly move away. Welch approached the subject, but the subject would not remove his hands from his pockets after repeated requests to do so. The subject was placed in investigative detention, and a Terry frisk was performed. Welch found a small bag of marijuana and removed it from the subject's person. The subject was arrested. A search revealed a bag filled with several small, empty bags normally used in the distribution of marijuana, a small folding knife and $120. The complainant said he was approached by the subject and asked if he would like to buy marijuana. The complainant refused and notified USCPD. By

SLED awarded grant to check DNA samples

The State Law Enforcement Division will get $1.1 million to deal with a backlog in DNA samples from old cases where arrests haven't been made.

The U.S. Justice Department awarded a $511,584 grant to hire eight scientists to make sure backlogs don't happen in the future, SLED Chief Robert Stewart said.

Previous grants helped the agency get through current cases that had been stacking up.

Police agencies are sending DNA samples from cold cases without a suspect hoping to get a match, Stewart said.

Cell phone ban urged for teenage drivers

New drivers have enough things to worry about without adding cell phones and other wireless devices to the mix, federal safety regulators say. They want all states to make it illegal for teenagers and other novice drivers to jabber on phones.

The National Transportation Safety Board on Tuesday voted to add to its annual list of "Most Wanted Safety Recommendations to States" a ban on novice drivers using any wireless communication devices.

"Learning how to drive while distracted is definitely a recipe for disaster," said the board's chairman, Mark Rosenker.

Holocaust survivor, Nazi hunter dies at 96

Concentration camp guards stood with their rifles ready, awaiting the order to fire at Simon Wiesenthal and other prisoners standing on the edge of a pit where their bodies would topple. The future Nazi hunter waited to die. And waited.

Hours later, after many of the condemned slumped in exhaustion, the camp commandant delivered a reprieve: Soviet troops were coming and the prisoners would be taken away.

"We thought we were going mad," Wiesenthal later wrote. "Perhaps we feared (or hoped) we were mad already."

Wiesenthal, who died Tuesday in his sleep at his Vienna home at age 96, was driven by his memories of the Holocaust to fight for justice for its victims, dedicating himself to tracking down Nazi war criminals and to being a voice for the 6 million Jews who perished.

Two tons of Georgia boiled peanuts to go to troops in Iraq

Daniel Yee THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

FOREST PARK, Ga. — Soldiers in war often yearn for the comforts of home not found on the battlefield — a new pair of socks, a package of homemade cookies. Soon, members of Georgia's 48th Infantry Brigade will be receiving something they can't find anywhere else: boiled peanuts from their home state.

Two tons of the peanuts — about 5,000 store-ready, 12.5-ounce packages labeled "The Country Caviar" and "Georgia Fresh Green Peanuts" — were loaded into four Iraq-bound shipping containers on Tuesday. It's expected to take a week for Atlanta-based shipping giant UPS Inc. to deliver the shipment of Hardy Farms peanuts to the brigade's 4,300 soldiers.

"There's enough peanuts for every one of them to get a pouch," said Rex Bullock, the Pitts, Ga., farmer who helped "Operation Boiled Peanuts" get off the ground. "Peanuts are a big crop for Georgia. This is something you'd eat if you grew up in the South."

The project started when one of Bullock's former employees, Spc. Clark Rountree, made a simple homesick request in late July — he yearned for boiled peanuts amid the parched sand and 130-degree temperatures of Iraq.

Chileans look to help Andean mining town

SEWELL, Chile — This old mining town high in the Andes has no streets. It has stairs.

Its houses and shops spread across two mountain slopes at an elevation of 7,250 feet, too steep for vehicles. Seen from a distance, the town looks like a pyramid of steps flanked by buildings painted in vivid hues of green, yellow, red and blue.

Chileans are striving to restore a town that played a historic role in the birth of the copper industry, the country's main export. The government, which declared the town a national monument in 1998, hopes to persuade UNESCO to add it to the U.N. agency's list of World Heritage sites.

Sewell was founded a century ago as home for hundreds of miners working shafts at nearby El Teniente, the world's largest underground copper mine.
