Dying to Order.
Dying to order is one of the most sacred customs of the American Indian. Thirty years ago Standing Elk came to Major James McLaughlin, the author of "My Friend the Indian," and said, "Father, my wife will die today and she wants a coffin from you."

The major asked him what the ailment was and he replied:
"Just nothing but that she heard the ghosts calling and must go."
Somebody had told her, it turned out, that she was sick, so she had "painted for death," and all her relatives had gathered about to bemoan her—and incidentally divide her property as soon as she was dead. There was no use in the major's arguing about it, so he had the coffin made.

In many cases those "painted for death" are actually bullied into dying, but Mrs. Standing Elk was still too vigorous. Finally in despair she carried the coffin into the house on her own shoulders and several years later the major saw it still standing on end in her house. Shelves had been fitted into it, and it was doing duty as a cupboard.—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

A CHAIR OF GOOD ROADS.

The directors of the Texas State Agricultural and Mechanical College have determined to establish a good roads chair in that institution and their action is wise and commendable.

Young men who are studying scientific methods of farming will be none the worse off for knowing something about scientific roadmaking. Farms and roads are generally pretty close together—in fact a farm is not a desirable possession unless there is a passably good road leading to it. Farmers ought to be interested in the road question, for in most localities they pay most of the taxes that go to the maintenance of highways. They do practically all the routine road work in States where the "warning-in" plan prevails. As to the indirect tax that is entailed by bad roads no one suffers more from it than the farmer.

Despite these facts there are many farmers who are surprisingly indifferent to road improvement. Some of them, having known nothing but bad roads all their lives, are content to plod along in the same old way their ancestors plodded. Others are frightened by the prospect of increased taxation or do not realize the worth of a good road to a rural community.

The young man who wants to become educated in farming is a progressive individual and is not going to be satisfied with running a farm on the conventional pattern that was handed down to him from his great grandfather. This young man expects to do things on a different plan. He is a believer in improvements and it is a safe bet that he is a believer in good roads—or will be by the time he gets back home from college.

It is this young man who must be relied upon to keep the world from going "supperless to bed," and it is highly appropriate that he should be taught something about road building.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The Good Roads Question.

There are so many reasons for good roads in the South that the subject could be discussed from now on. The sole cause of bad roads, however, is the indifference of individuals. Men meet and blow off a lot of steam and resolute only to go back home and wait for the other fellow to start the work.

The only hope is in perfect organization with a definite end in view—an organization that has some financial resource, and that is made up entirely of people free from politics. So far as possible, the board or members at the head of such an organization should be made up of men scattered in all directions, and as far apart as possible in the territory to be improved. This will prevent any clique or faction getting together and scheming to improve certain sections of the territory to be improved, and incidentally securing options and gobbling up real estate along the line of improvement. This form of graft is what brings about much of the protest usually heard from small property owners who feel that they are already tax-ridden. And their complaint is not without just cause often.

The people who should take the most interest in good roads are the farmers. It means to them:

Highways over which to haul their crops to markets.

Smooth, good roads that will save their time, and preserve their hard-earned and high-priced live stock.

Better facilities for sending their children to school.

Enhancement of their farms' values (for every man covets a well-kept, profitable farm facing a good road).

In Davidson County, Tenn., in the wonderful bluegrass section around Nashville, the highways are dotted with profitable dairy farms. The great roads stretch for miles like white sheets ("pikes" they are called up there), and in that section there is no cry of "back to the farm." The greatest trouble seems to be to build up cities.

What a sight it is to visit that section and notice the things you don't see. No farms without live stock, no idle fields, winter or summer, no unpainted farm homes, no isolated rural school houses, no big plantations rented to ignorant whites and negroes while the owner lives in a city mansion.

Those folks live and die within their own domain and hand their lands down to the next generation. They are content with their lot and live on the fat of the land. Their homes face the beautiful pikes and are surrounded by great groves and rolling, well-kept lawns. They do not call themselves farmers. They simply own a place where they raise everything they need. Fast horses carry them to and from town miles away. Automobiles carry them to the theatres and bring them home at night.

Those folks are good roads cranks. Invariably the man who takes the least interest in good roads is the fellow who owns a vast amount of property. He is too greedy to sell that part of his land that he cannot till himself, and yet he is not willing to enter in a movement that might improve his land that the assessor will raise his tax.

One of the greatest evils in the cotton belt to-day is the owning and controlling of vast plantations, and the renting of these lands by the owners who sap a living from the toil of poor white people and negroes—"share croppers." The breaking up of these plantations will make our country the richest in the world.

Good roads will break these up. The owners will groan under the tax and they will be compelled to relinquish their holdings to people who are farmers and who want to farm.—Memphis News-Scimitar.

Where We Get Asbestos.

More than four-fifths of the world's supply of asbestos comes from the Province of Quebec, in what is known as the serpentine belt, running through the counties of Thetford, Coleraine, Robertson and Broughton, about 100 miles from Montreal. While the history of the industry dates back to 1877, it has only expanded to its present proportions during the last few years. The province has already produced over $25,000,000 worth of asbestos, and is now averaging $2,000,000 worth a year.—Chicago Journal.

A Burning Eruption Covered Her From Head to Feet.

"Four years ago I suffered severely with a terrible eczema, being a mass of sores from head to feet and for six weeks confined to my bed. During that time I suffered continual torture from itching and burning. After being given up by my doctor I was advised to try Cuticura Remedies. After the first bath with Cuticura Soap and application of Cuticura Ointment I enjoyed the first good sleep during my entire illness. I also used Cuticura Resolvent and the treatment was continued for about three weeks. At the end of that time I was able to be about the house, entirely cured, and have felt no ill effects since. I would advise any person suffering from any form of skin trouble to try the Cuticura Remedies, as I know what they did for me. Mrs. Edward Nanning, 1112 Salina St., Watertown, N. Y., Apr. 11, 1909."

How to Kill Flies.

"Formaldehyde is a good fly killer and can be used with splendid results," said A. P. Pannill, assistant health commissioner of Norfolk, Va. "We tried it last year and found it very effective. Put two teaspoonfuls of formaldehyde in a plate or saucer," said Mr. Pannill, and place the vessel in a light place and the flies will go to it. After drinking the poison they will fly away and soon fall dead. While the flies will drink the formaldehyde if it is placed in any part of the room, the result will be better if the vessel containing the stuff is placed where it is light, because the light attracts the flies and for that reason many more will be put out of existence than if the receptacle is kept in a dark place. To place the saucer or plate in or near a window early in the morning will get the rest results."

The Valuable Match.

There was a loud splash and a moment later a dripping head appeared above the waves. On the end of the dock was a stevedore nonchalantly lighting his pipe.

"Help, man!" cried the chap in the water. "Can't you see I am overboard! I can't swim."

"How often you been down?" asked the stevedore, shielding the flickering match from the wind.

"Once, I believe, but hurry up, man! Give me a hand!"

"You wait! You have two times yet to go down and I have only one match. I'll catch you on the last trip."—Chicago News.

A Certain Rich Man.

A certain rich man with a summer residence at a resort frequented by New Yorkers had favorably remarked the intelligence and spirit of his gardener's son—the latter had even begun a college course.

"When your boy comes out of college," said the wealthy cottager, "send him to me and I may be able to give him a start in life."

The young man completed his college course with credit. Then he made his call on the rich man of this story.

Let it be set down to the latter's credit that he was as good as his word. He offered the young man the position of second butler.—New York Mail.

New Mexican Rifle.

Mexico has recently adopted a new automatic rifle, the invention of General Mondragon, for her troops. It is self-loading, but not self-firing, and the charge is ten shots. The armies of all civilized countries are now experimenting with automatic arms, but Mexico seems to be the first one to solve the problem of a practical rifle of this class. The Mondragon weighs but slightly more than the Springfield of the United States Army, and its mechanism is said to be simple and practical, in that it will stand much hard usage. When it was being tested one of the guns was fired rapidly and continuously until it became so hot that the stock took fire, without any interference with the operation of the mechanism. It is capable of sixty shots a minute.—Tip in the New York Press.

Bjornson's Triumph.

Bjornstjerne Bjornson, the news of whose death has been received with deep regret throughout Europe, was once the subject of an involuntary compliment. He was asked on what occasion he obtained the greatest pleasure from his fame as a poet. He replied: "It was when a delegation from the Right came to my house in Christiania and smashed all the windows. Because, when they had thus attacked me and were starting for home again, they felt they ought to sing something, and so they began to sing 'Yes, We Love This Land of Ours.' They could do nothing else. They had to sing the song of the man whom they had attacked."—London Daily News.
