

FIREMEN HOLD SPRINKLER DRILLS

Lydia and Clinton's voluntary In-Plant Fire Brigademen reviewed operations of the plants automatic sprinkler systems last month. Fire Chiefs Clyde Trammell, Lydia, and E. P. Taylor, Clinton, rigged up out-of-doors systems to demonstrate the effectiveness of sprinkler heads when triggered by rise of temperature.

The heads of faulty and new sprinklers were melted by a torch held by the Chiefs. Brigademen noted the delay in painted or grease clogged heads operating as compared with clean heads. Comparison of the patterns of water given off by upright and inverted type heads were observed and studied by the men.

The fire brigades are composed of men from all departments and shifts.

Fishing Tips for Bigger Fish and Smaller Lies

There's no more avid sportsman than the fisherman and summer's the time when millions of Izaak Walton's eager disciples spring into action with quivering poles and hearts to land the "big" ones. So here are a few tips for top catches.

Start with the tackle box . . . Dark colored tackle boxes absorb the sun's rays and create excessive heat inside that can damage contents. Keep box cool with a coat of white enamel paint, which will reflect sun's rays.

Be sure to test your line-end . . . Last year's casting gave it a lot of punishment and wear against the rod tip guide. After hooking a fish (or snag), test hook for strength.

About worm fishing . . . Worms die quickly in a tin can that sets in the hot sun. Keep it in the shade; use damp, not wet, soil and change it if worms begin to die. Do not crowd worms.

Go deep for bass when it's hot . . . Scraping the bottom with an artificial lure that is especially designed for deep diving is a very efficient bass-fishing technique for hot summer days.

Temperature that fish prefer . . . Fresh water fish are most active and likely to take a bait or lure in these water temperatures: (figures and degrees). Brook Trout, 58; Brown Trout and Rainbows, 61 to 68 (67 to 68 for dry flies); Small Mouth Bass, 67; Large Mouth Bass, 60 to 73 although they may take bugs in upper 80's; Lake Trout, 41; Pan fish (Crappie, Catfish, Sunfish, etc.) 60 to 80.

Good luck, better fishing, and fewer lies . . .

Question: I've heard it said that if I am not under Social Security during the last five years before I retire, I've lost everything. Is this fair?

Answer: It's both unfair and untrue! That five-year stint is only in connection with disability benefits. You must have five years of coverage out of the ten years before your disability developed. You may still be able to get retirement benefits.

Question: I haven't been working this past year, but I did get a raise in some dividends to make me have to pay income tax. In fact, the total dividends come to $1400. How much of my social security must I give up?

Answer: Not one penny! unearned income — dividends, interest, rents, and the like—have no effect on your benefits.

Question: My uncle died in 1951. You told me then he didn't work enough to leave any death payments. Now you say the requirements have been lowered. Since he had two years of covered work, can I get the lump-sum death payment?

Answer: No, only monthly benefits are made possible by these latest changes.

Question: My son died in New York in November. He was never married. Can I draw his social Security?

Answer: It is possible that you may be due the lump-sum death payment. The amount you can get would depend on his earnings under social security and the amount you paid on the burial. The lump-sum payment is never more than $255. Monthly benefits are also payable to dependent parents under certain conditions. If you were dependent on your son, such dependency must be proved within two years after his death.

Cook-outs, steaks and hot charcoal are a fine combination for a good time—but also for an occasional accidental burn. Red Cross first aid care is to apply a sterile dry dressing to the burn to exclude the air. This reduces pain. If the burn is an extensive one, treat for shock, apply several layers of sterile, dry gauze dressings and see a doctor.
