

Employees Contribute Blood

Three hundred and eleven employees from Clinton Mills rolled up their sleeves to contribute blood for the company's annual plea for the life support substance. Sonny King, who serves as co-ordinator of the program, noted that this year's request for blood has had the full support of employees donors.

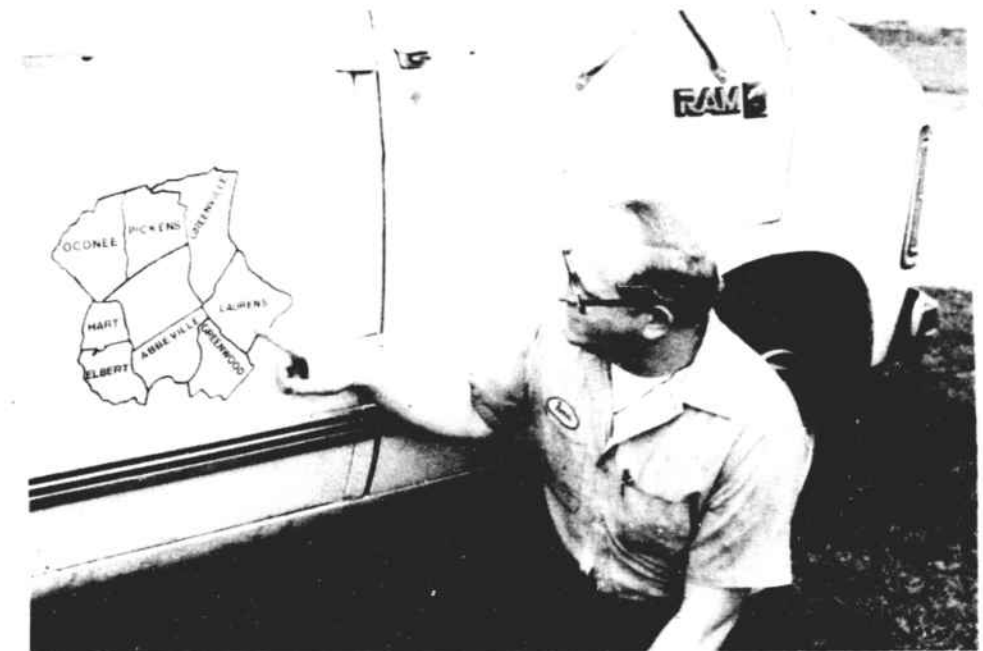

"I'm glad to be a first-time blood donor," Paula Sanders, No. 2 Cloth.

Clara Young of Carolina-Georgia Blood Center gives Ray Patterson a mini-physical to assure him he's approved as a blood donor.

Susan Mentor of the Carolina-Georgia Blood Center, tells Ralph Bell, Plant No. 2 Spinning, how his blood will be used in a life-saving operation at a regional hospital.

Ronnie Evans, Plant No. 1 Weaving, examines a map showing the various counties in which hospitals use blood donated by Clinton employees.

Irene Bolick, Plant No. 1 Spinning, gives a brief medical history to Kay Camon.

Blanca Harris carefully places a bandaid on Michael Vance's arm following blood-drawing process.