Our New York Letter.

The Immensity of the Mighty Metropolis--Owned by the Jews and Run by the Irish.

It is not what a New York writer of items of interest should write about but where there is so much of interest the question is what to leave out.

Other communities eager for improvements-particularly in dustrial enterprises, this city already has a profusion and is surfeited. There never is any general rejoicing at the inauguration of new industries.

Few people outside and not all inside this great city realize its magnitude. Five million souls crowded together as here are calculated to make and keep things lively on a 2 by 10 mile-tract of practiced, and no need to go abroad, for there is very little to be seen on the other side that cannot be seen here and much more; from an enlighteningeducation-standpoint-a visit to the Metropolis is invaluable. This does not mean the little hasty, hurried trips for business or pleasure but a stay of some weeks and a wise putting in of the days of those weeks.

The "skyscrapers", public buildings, churches, colleges, theatres, hotels, parks, mansions. business houses, factories, railways, tunnels, etc., are as a rule ahead of the world. The museums of the city, visited by millions of people, offer objects of study unsurpassed in the old world .-After the good things, the bright side, then the bad things-the darker side offers interest, food for thought to any bumanity, especially students of human nature and political economists. It is to New York the good and bad of the world wends its way; once here much good becomes bad; some bad becomes good.

The natives of the city, study the city but little, it all strikes them as a natural course of events and they look neither to the right nor the left-bothering not their minds about these things. It is the visitor and the man raised elsewhere, who is impressed and who delves into things here.

It is amazing how little the average New Yorker knows of the rest of the world; surprising how much the outsider does know .--The make up of the men of the city is below the average, the country over-intellectually and otherwise, they as a rule run in a groove, get in it early and stay there. Exceptions there are, and these are men of broad minds who tower above the average the country over. Strange but true these men of renown in business, professions, trades, etc., are all boss things generally and the natives work for or under them.

maker, Siegel, Altman and others are all from the outside-it is so in the professions—so in all branches of life.

The great editors of to-day and those of the past, all were out siders. To New Yorkers it makes no difference -they don't care a snap, their sole desire and bent seems to be to exist, drift; local pride so prominent elsewhere has no place here.

Why all these strange conditions? The only reason the writer can give is the density of the population in the past-the phenomenal increase of the presentthe crowded, cramped, quarters, all have to make their arenamore thought is given to elbowing one's way through the crowds existing-than aspiring to renown, fame and foremost place. The pole. new man, the outsider attracted by these conditions and the Every nationality is represented—all tongues are spoken, the various customs of the globe are

> The New York parents and children are as subservient servants of the outsider as the slaves of the South ever were-and are tolerated by their masters far less than the slaves were by theirs.

There is a field for study here and the student of human nature can not find in the universe more to tackle than in Gotham.

He Was Saying Grace.

A deaf old gentleman dined with a family where grace was always said. When the guests were seated the bost bowed his head and began to repeat the ac customed verse in a subdued, rev erent tone.

"Eh? What's that?" demanded the deaf old man, who sat beside him

The host smiled patiently and began again, in a louder, more deprecatory voice.

"Speak a little louder." don't catch what you say," the old gentleman persisted.

A low ripple of laughter went round the table. The host, his face crimson with embarrassment, raised his voice and repeated the verse. The deaf gentleman did his best to hear, but failed. He placed one hand upon his host's

"What did you say?" he demanded irascibly.

The host cast him an angry

Street Car.

Winston-Salem special in Charlotte Observer: George Wash ington, a white man 32 years old. was killed by a street car near Nissen Park at 9 o'clock. He was drinking and was lying on the track. The motorman saw him when only a few feet away. He applied the brakes and reversed his car, but not in time to prevent the accident. The coroner's jury attaches no blame to the motorman or the street train upon the top of which car company. Washington was employed by the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company. He was married and is survived by a wife and three children.
