Bradford's Springs.

IT is a circumstance of no small importance to the citizens of this State to have a convenient and healthy situation, to which they can have access during the Summer and Autumnal months.

The Bradford Spring, at this time, exhibit such a situation. The buildings, here, are capacious and convenient; and are as well calculated for the accommodation of the delicate and infirm, as those who are in search of pleasure.

The situation is, probably, one of the most eligible that this country affords. The elevation is considerably above the common level of the surface. The rise and declivity of the hill is gradual and regular; and its summit smooth and unbroken. The Springs empty out of the basis of the hill, at different apertures, where it abruptly breaks off, in almost, a perpendicular descent.

The water is a strong mineral. It is transparent and palatable. The ingredients which form the composition of this mineral, have not yet been accurately ascertained by chymical analysis. A few individuals have annually visited these Springs, and those alone, can form an adequate idea of the advantage which results from attending them.

The ruinous condition of the buildings in all probability, and the want of accommodation has, hitherto, prevented a number of persons from attending these Springs. But the subscriber flatters himself that he is now, well prepared for the accommodation of a number of persons. And he pledges himself to spare no exertions to render the situation of all those who attend these Springs both comfortable and agreeable.

DOMESTIC ECONOMY.

Dame Fortune has been generally represented as blind and fickle; but I have often thought that Fashion should also be personified, and if we called her a dame, she must be more fickle and eccentric than ever Fortune was.

The variety of changes to which the world has been subjected by Fashion, and the inordinate extravagance which has resulted from these useless changes, has produced incalculable evils in laying a foundation for waste and profusion, the ill effects of which are now felt. In former times, a house was furnished with the utmost prudence; no useless article was ever purchased; and the high backed mahogany chairs, the heavy carved mirrors, the bed and durable curtains, and all the ornaments of the mansion, were selected for their lasting and useful qualities. After an absence of twenty years a friend returned to his country, and his eyes were greeted with the same old-fashioned, yet ponderous furniture, which time had familiarized, nay, even rendered dear to him. He saw and recognized the old China jars, the sprigged tea cobs and flower plates, the old chased sugar dish and tea pot, the highly polished wardrobe, in which were deposited the brocade dresses of his grandam, and the embroidered waistcoats of his grandfather; all these objects revived the recollection of earlier days, of happy moments, and served to increase that attachment to home, in which are centred so many joys, and so many enjoyments.

But now the scene is altered; and the furniture of a house is changed as frequently as a coat or waistcoat. Instead of the useful and durable, we have the light, costly, and the flimsy ornaments of the drawing room; gilt vases, cut glass chandeliers, grand upright pianos, silk curtains, and all the paraphernalia of a fairy's palace; and immense fortunes are thus thrown away on these fickle, thoughtless changes, and, as Peter Trott says, "the upholsterer has scarce done knocking up, when in comes the auctioneer and knocks down."

Thus fashion may be called fickle, expensive, and sometimes imperative; it ought to be resisted with firmness and decision. I would by no means be so much out of fashion as to be peculiarly strange and absurd; but to follow all its eccentricities, to be a slave to its caprices, and ruined by its changes, is to be at once deaf to prudence, to discretion, and good sense. It is not alone over the domestic organization that fashion exercises a powerful influence; it extends to the person—and is equally as fickle and costly in matters of dress and personal ornament. Look in the bureaux and trunks of modern men of fashion, and see the number of coats, waistcoats, pantaloon, hats, and boots. Why this unnecessary accumulation of expense? Why purchase more than is absolutely necessary to make a respectable appearance? Think you it adds to the appearance of a man to wear a blue coat at breakfast, a pea-green at dinner, and a black in the evening? Then the ladies, though they have not as many superfluities as the gentlemen, still they have many to spare; there are many expenses which they could curtail, many little trifles which they could economize. It frequently happens
