

All the great cannon foundries of Europe are overrun with orders and working day and night. The Troy Times thinks they'll have peace over there—after a big war.

The Baltimore Manufacturers' Record invokes the Southern farmers to establish creameries, stating that the amount of Western butter consumed in the South, and often in good live stock sections, is surprisingly large, while of cheese almost the entire consumption in the South comes from the North and West.

Beggars, go South! Walk right down across Mexico, Central America and the Isthmus of Panama into South America and vend your ways to Brazil. A professional beggar died recently in Rio Janeiro and left a fortune of $200,000. A local journal remarks that the discovery should occasion no surprise, as it is well known that many of the beggars in that city are worth more than those who bestow alms on them.

According to the New York Commercial Advertiser the Mongolians of that city have learned the secret of managing the police force. Within the limits of two small blocks in the Chinese section of the city there are, our contemporary asserts, between forty and fifty Chinese gambling saloons, the proprietors of which pay on an average $5 a week for "protection." The numbers of the houses in which the games go on are given, together with the names of the proprietors and the names of the collectors. The total yearly revenue is set down at $12,500.

A German observer of nature says that the persons who think they see thunder storms going on down below them are the victims of an optical delusion. He refers to those persons who declare that they have seen such phenomena among the mountains. Observations made by him among the Alps have convinced him that the lowest stratum of clouds in a thunder storm is never less than 4,200 feet above the earth, and that generally it is 7,500 feet up. This, says Harper's Weekly, might be reassuring to nervous people who fear that they and thunder storms are likely to come in contact, were it not for the fact that the most terrible parts of these storms notoriously come low down as church steeples and persons standing in open fields. Perhaps it was not cloud strata that the mountain tourists were speaking of, but the lightnings which escaped from them, and which they observed playing far below.

The Korean peninsula, which is a kind of forerunner of China's hand stretched out into the Pacific, may possibly open up by and by as a new gold field. Mr. Foulk, our consul at Wonsan, has sent to Washington some very interesting statistics on the subject, and a succinct history of the "yellow fever." The natives have no machinery, no means of digging into the bowels of the earth, but in simply hunting over the surface during the last year they have picked up nuggets and particles worth something like half a million dollars. The peculiarities of the people, however, constitute at present an obstacle to foreign enterprise. There is so firm a prejudice against outsiders that they are apt to find a grave at the same time that they find gold. This fact is only a slight deterrent, though, for if the mountains of Korea lack promising both Americans and Europeans will teach the natives a lesson in the resources of civilization.

An Asheville (N. C.) letter says: "The mineral resources of this section of North Carolina are attracting renewed attention. A few days since machinery for extensive gold-mining operations passed through this city for Swain County. There were several car-loads of engines and huge hydraulic attachments which impressed the observer with the idea that the company beginning this work meant to get the gold out if there be any. In Henderson County a mine near Boylston is in operation and is reported to be rich in the deposits of the precious metal. Northern capitalists are beginning to invest in mineral lands in this State. Immigration Agent J. T. Patrick informed me that within the near future a large number of men of means from the North would consummate negotiations now pending and come to this State to carry on mining operations. In the last sixty days he says that $200,000 of Northern capital has been invested in undeveloped North Carolina mines."

RETRIBUTION.

A Burglar Caught in the Act Kills His Pursuer.

Captured and Hanged Two Hours After His Victim's Death.

A terrible tragedy was enacted the other morning at Huron, Ind., a quiet little hamlet of two hundred inhabitants, on the Ohio and Mississippi Railroad. Residents of the place were startled about one o'clock in the morning by cries for help. Dr. W. C. Butler's wife heard the cries and awoke her husband, who immediately went to the rescue. He was soon joined by others, who, on arriving near the point from which the cries came, perceived two men struggling, but failed to recognize either.

As they approached one man drew a knife and plunged it into the other, after which he fled. The crowd passed the fallen man and pursued the murderer. After a short race, and firing several shots, he was brought to a halt by the railroad culvert. Returning to where the fallen man lay they discovered it was Mr. John T. Davis, a highly respectable citizen, and agent of the Ohio and Mississippi Railroad.

Huron, Ind. was then without the power of speech. There was a cut about four inches long in the muscle of the right arm, which had severed the main artery, a cut in the neck, and a bruise on the forehead. Dr. Butler endeavored to save his life, but he had passed beyond human aid, having bled to death. Mrs. Carrie Long was the first person to reach the victim, and his last words were "Carrie, I am dying. That man murdered me."

After securing the murderer the crowd broke up and went to where his victim lay and asked him if he had killed that man. He answered "No." The shirt sleeve from the left arm of the murderer was missing and the right arm was cut off. They were successful, and it was soaked in blood. After finding he would be captured he had torn it off and cast it away. They also found Mr. Davis's clothes in the vest pocket with his gold watch in the vest pocket.

James Stranex, Constable of Spice Valley township, Lawrence county, arrived on the scene and took charge of the burglar, saw, spectacles and cases, two coats, a pair of rubber shoes, a case with no stains of blood, a brick mason's hammer and some other articles. Mrs. Carrie Long was the first person to reach the victim, and his last words were "Carrie, I am dying. That man murdered me."

When Mrs. Davis heard of the arrest she desired that she might see the man, and she said: "Wicked wretch! you are the man who killed my husband!" She then said: "That party who was hanging from the gallows, man entered our bedroom, which is in the part of the house, both of us were in bed. He tried to secure the money under my pillow and awakened me. I was too frightened to cry out, yet, seeing me awake, he took me by the neck of the bed, from the foot of the bed and fled. I awoke Mr. Davis, who immediately started in pursuit of him. That is the last time I saw him alive."

The murderer was found in front of the Davis house, and he acknowledged that they were his. He was then taken back to where the victim lay, when a party of six or eight masked men appeared and took him to a walnut tree at the east side of Crim's store on Main street. When asked what his name was he said William Dunn, of Cincinnati, Ohio, and that he was fifty-four years old. He was asked if he had any thing else to say and answered "No." A rope was quickly thrown over a limb and the murderer was swung into mid air at 3 o'clock.

The body was cut down and a coroner's inquest held. The verdict read: "Came to his death by the hands of parties unknown." He was buried in a rosewood coffin and the remains were buried in a field.

While returning from the scene on the passenger train L. P. Stephens, son of the County Clerk, and a colored man, were in the car. They were involved in a quarrel. Stephens struck Pierce with a pair of brass knuckles, and Pierce drew a knife, stabbing Stephens in the side and abdomen, inflicting fatal wounds.

RIOTING RENEWED.

Blood Once More Flowing in the Streets of Belfast.

A Belfast (Ireland) dispatch of late date says: Rioting has been resumed. From midnight last night until four o'clock this morning a rifle fight was in progress on the Shankill road and the Old Falls road. One person was killed and many were wounded. The town is seething. Sectarian strife has become a deplorable, cold-blooded fashion. Expert marksmen this morning conducted a rifle fight from roof tops, chimneys and other elevated positions. The soldiers of partisans, who carefully kept out of range, were prepared to assist by supplying ammunition and removing the wounded. The sides were carried throughout the contest. The Orangemen admit that one of their men, named MacFarlane, was killed, and that two others, named Smith and Johnson, were seriously wounded. The police were met on a minor casualty on their side. They claim that they killed and wounded many Catholics, but the latter deny that they sustained serious losses. Many injured by a storm at Newark, Dakota. Mrs. Culver was frightened to death the same day by a storm at Chicago.

WHIRLPOOL CRACKS.

Graham Makes Another Trip Safely at Niagara Falls.

An Exhibitor Loses His Life in the Whirlpool Rapids.

Graham, the Philadelphia cooper, made his second successful trip through the Whirlpool Rapids at Niagara Falls on the 19th. The barrel was the same as that used in the first trip. A slight change was made in the hammock, the inside of which was raised up so as to throw his head out. The head of the barrel was taken out, and in its place a canvas was tacked around the edge, leaving a hole sufficiently large to let the head through, and fastened close around the neck. This left his head and neck protruding, standing on the banks and visible to the crowd.

The barrel was taken down the bank early in the afternoon and fastened to the shore at 3:15 o'clock. Graham started leisurely down the bank and stripped, preparatory to the trip. At 3:50 o'clock the barrel was towed out into the center of the stream. Five minutes later the rope was cut off and the barrel started down, passing under the bridge a little nearer the Canadian side than the American. The Manning elevator, which had been called for, was not there, and the barrel whirled round all had a chance to see his face, which could be easily recognized. He was seen to enter the whirlpool near the Canada shore at 4 o'clock. The course was such that the barrel circled around, gradually nearing the Canada shore, for ten minutes. C. D. Carlton, a citizen of the Falls, who had gone to the point to view the trip, took off his coat and jumped into the water, but the barrel drifted in so close that he could catch it. Graham was in a very bad way, drifting among the rocks and breaking up the water, and he was not seen again. It would have stood a good chance of being killed. So close was he to the shore that he called for some one to come out and get him. When a man came out he found the barrel in the water, and one knee was more or less abused by striking against the rock.

Graham says that the weight of the waves had no effect on him, but that the spray rattled him and $1,000 would not tempt him to repeat the trip. It is doubtful if he would have stood the trip through the Devil's Hole Rapids.

A SEVERE accident befell a fisherman of Lewiston, who was anxious to go down on the dummy Maid of the Mist, and who also figured as an important witness in the Webb inquest, was drowned in the Whirlpool Rapids. He had been hanging around all day, intending to earn ten dollars offered for taking Graham out of the Whirlpool, and was seen to enter the water at 3:30 o'clock. He was seen to enter the water at Thompson Point, at the outlet of the Whirlpool, and was drowned. The body at once rose to the surface, and was caught at Lewiston.

The latter was unanimously elected Vice-President. A BIG DEFLACATION.

A Boston Treasurer Steals Half a Million—Committing Suicide.

Boston business circles were surprised the other afternoon by the announcement that William Gray, Jr., Treasurer of the Indian Orchard and Atlantic Cotton Mills, was a defaulter.

It was ascertained that the defalcation would amount to over $500,000. The capital stock of the Atlantic Company is $1,000,000, and that of the Indian Orchard $400,000. The former has extensive mills at Lawrence, Mass., for the manufacture of cotton goods. Mr. Gray was elected treasurer of the companies about five years ago and the utmost confidence was placed in him. He had been a member of the Eastern Yacht Club. He was also one of the syndicate of ten that built the Puritan, the America's cup defender. He was also a model teacher by him his yacht Huron was built four years ago.

Gray was a member of one of Boston's wealthiest families. His father was the leading ship-builder in the country for a number of years and retired several years ago. He owned one of the finest residences on Beacon street, Boston, had a wife and nine children, and was a member of the Eastern Yacht Club. The money stolen by Gray, as well as his wife's fortune, was squandered on yachts.

SUICIDE ON THE STAGE.

An Actor Kills Himself in Presence of the Audience.

A real tragedy of the theatre has occurred at Casale, a town of Piedmont, in Northern Italy. An actor, who was playing a leading part, failed to please the audience, who displayed their disapproval by prolonged hissing. The actor stopped suddenly in his lines, and, advancing to the footlights, drew a pistol from a pocket and fired. In my opinion it is a mistake to allow an actress more than ten minutes to change her dress, or a carpenter more than eight to set the stage.

His wife, who was seated in a box, witnessed the tragedy, and in a frenzy attempted to leap to the floor beneath, which was quite a distance. She was restrained by several friends, and a model teacher by him his yacht Huron was built four years ago.

ANOTHER SEIZURE.

An American Fishing Schooner Boarded by Canadians.

Fined for a Trivial Offence Committed Weeks Ago.

A dispatch from Port Hawkesbury, Nova Scotia, announces that the Gloucester seuer Howard Holbrook, Captain McKean, has been seized for violating the customs laws at that place by failing to report at the Custom House. Three weeks ago the Holbrook passed through that ocean highway, the Strait of Canso, on her way to Gloucester from North Bay with a full cargo of mackerel. She remained in the Strait some hours, but did not report at any Custom House. The Strait of Canso is lined with Custom Houses, and it is difficult for a Captain to know where to enter. Captain McKean did not think it worth while to enter at any of them for the few hours he remained in this ocean highway. The other day the Howard Holbrook again entered the Straits on her way to New Brunswick, and on that day she was promptly seized by Collector Bourinot, who took possession of Captain McKean's ropes and placed an officer on board. The facts were telegraphed to Ottawa, and the main battery of the Straits was sent to the vessel on payment of $100 fine.

A Halifax dispatch says: This action of the authorities is important, as it shows that American vessels are being rigorously enforced in a few ports they appear to be entirely ignored in others, as in the case of the schooner "Shihon," which was driven out of Liverpool, but received special permission from Ottawa to remain in Louisburg four days, ship and mail and all the supplies she required. No seizures are to be attempted for fishing within the three-mile limit unless a vessel is seen to be in the Strait of Canso, and a unanimous condemnation of the Government for its farcical fishery protection service, the Government officials are declaring that the American vessels are scrupulously obeying the truth of the matter is that American skippers can distinguish a cruiser five to seven miles distant. If for the day's inter-lim it he can't go to get outside before the permission is granted, and finally, with a noise like thunder, the boats loose, rushing down upon the town, carrying away everything in its course, blocking up the streets and piling up the peat in places to the height of ten feet, and the houses were rent asunder, and fences, porches, and iron posts torn away. Fences and houses were swept away.

THE bewildered and terrified population believed their town was being destroyed by an earthquake, and added their piercing yells and cries for help to the indescribable horrors of the night. A boy of seven and an old man named Patrick Keating were lost.
