A HEALTHY MAN.

Here Are the Points That Go to Make a Centenarian.

Here are the points of a healthy man. If you have them all you may, barring accidents, count on being a centenarian. If you have most of them, you'll reach a ripe old age, but even if you have only a few don't be alarmed, for many apparent ly crazy human machines last a surprisingly long time.

First, your body and limbs should be plump, but the plumpness should be of the firm and muscular, not the fleshy type.

Your figure ought to be erect, and, whether you are tall or short, well proportioned. Length without breadth is a very bad thing in a man, for there is no room for vital organs large enough to thoroughly perform their duties.

Your step should be springy and elastic, your gait firm and easy. These things indicate muscles of good quality and nerve of good tone. Your eye should be bright and neither prominent nor hollow. Bright eyes show that the circulation of blood in the brain is good. Your complexion should be clear and fresh. It is usually not well with you when your face is pale, sallow, florid or subject to sudden flushings. But in this matter your occupation has great influence, and you might have the worst possible complexion and be in perfect health. But that, of course, is the exception, not the rule. Your head should not be very large, or at least if it is large your neck, shoulders and chest ought to correspond in size. If you feel your pulse, it should be regular; if it drops a beat now and again or beets very fast and excitedly after the least ex-ertion or emotion then the heart is weak. Your breathing should be tranquil and inaudible. Any sounds mean that the pasages are more or less clogged. You should not know you have a stom ach-that is to say, as a rule. Of course there are times when that organ gets out of order in the healthlest individual, and of him and of his entertainment and of ways, except when the weather is bitterly cold, feel comfortably warm through your and toes. Otherwise something is wrong with the circulation or the heat producing apparatus.

You should have sound sleep, without dreams or nightmares, and it should not last too long or too short—say, eight te eight and a half hours every night.

Your voice should not be hoarse, and you should be a stranger to sore throats. Your appetite should not be too great or too small, while you should not be a suf-ferer from headaches, giddiness or neuralgia, and, of course, you should not have palpitations or faintings or variouse veins.

If you answer to the above description, you have neither disease of the brain. spinal cord, heart, lungs, liver, stomach, muscles or nerves, and you are in as perfeet health as it is possible for human beings to be.

But at the same time many a round shouldered, narrow chested, thin and sallow man is as tough as steel, works hard and lives till he is almost tired of the world, and, of course, even the healthiest of us must go through a course of colds, coughs, headaches, dyspepsia attacks and the like.

Still, if your chest is small in proportion to the rest of your body you are likely to have less stamina, and you should not overdo such things as football, cycling or even brain work.—New York World.

FOR MARGUERITE.

"Then you won't marry me, sweet to art?" The words were low and pleading, the voice very tender and true, but the girl on whose dainty ears they fall threw the beautiful head a little farther back and laughed out her half vexed, half deflant answer

"When you are on the road to succee Gerard, I'll marry you at once, if it be soon, for I can't wait forever, but as you fon't apparently wish for success, then with a lovely, willful smile and the pretaest of petulant moues-"goodby!" The man listened, his handsome face turning white, as if carved in stone.

"Success with you is only another name "Money," the girl interrupted, with that lovely light laugh again. "I know it, Gerard, and despise me for it if you will. If you had been brought up in poverty, if you had wanted frocks and pretty shoes and dances and pleasures of every kind-and, oh, thousands of things that you couldn's get—then you, too, would spell success with an M—a very big M and call it money! You would, I know you would," she ended bitterly.

The man sighed heavily. Fate was in deed against him now, and his career, light and hopeful as it looked a short time ago, seemed sadly dull and sember now, and why? Because of that lovely face that was turned away from him so petulantly, because of the mocking words that fell like little strokes of a whip across his loving heart. And while he thought the music in the distance ceased its soft throbbing, the dance was over, and he had had his answer, he supposed. He would say one more thing before they parted, he determined suddenly. He would have at any rate a clear understand-

And after that then the venture-to the right or to the left! He put out his hand to stay her as she would have risen. "I want to ask you one thing more," he said, so gently that her wandering attention was fixed on him ing with the woman he loved so madly.

"If I went into the business, my fa-ther's business, which, as you know, I hate—if I gave up my dreams of the bar and a life which I should love—a life which would be poor perhaps, but full of promise—if I had the prospect of success in the business of which you speak so highly, what then?" She turned to him with a new light sparkling in her beautiful eyes. Had she conquered at last—everything, every heps, every ambition at her feet?

"Then," she said, her voice tender with feeling and her soft eyelids drooping above the brilliant eyes, "then I should say no more." And her tones trembled into silence, and her white hands played nervously with the violets at the bosom of her delicate gown. The snow fell outside very softly, wrapping the sordid city in tenderest white

He had gone into the business that he had heartily disliked-for Margueriteand it had proved a success in his hands. They spoke of him for a knighthood this year. It did not elate him much, but his wife was delighted, and he was not tired of pleasing her yet. Only he had pleased her so much once, he had given up so much for her sake, that every sense had been curiously deadened to him since, and so the world's wear and tear came and went, and he felt but little of it. And his ideals? They were laid away very safely and secretly—the steps he would have climbed with so much vigor and perseverance were moss grown now and any with molding age. There was not much to work for now—so much had come to him, as supposed by his own endeavors as well as by good luck—and he had no child to leave it to. And his wife? How tenderly she had caressed him at the time of the sacrifice-how gently her pretty fingers had smoothe the way! She was so much accustomed to it all now, and he had "lived it down," as she once said he was the luckiest man in London. Perhaps it was true.

He saw the beautiful rooms, the brillians crowd, the flashing of countless gems, the peerless beauty of the woman who spoke, he heard the music rising and falling in the distance and breathed the delicate scents of rarest blossoms. Again he saw the word "Success" written everywhere-success that he, a beginner, a novice, could never hope to emulate. Suddenly the worn face of the master met his eyes. "I see the result," he said quietly.-Augusta Hancock in London Lady.

MAKING DIRT ROADS

GOOD DRAINAGE THE MOST IMPOR TANT REQUIREMENT.

Grass Should Be Removed Between Road way and Ditch-Rain Can Be Made Use ful-Height of Crown-Simple Engineer ing Principles of Road Building.

The Spectator has recently had evidence of the enlightening influence of travel. For years he has had occasion to walk, to drive and to wheel over a certain piece of country road, a piece of road as bad as a combination of mud and sand and sods and loose stones can make a road. Last summer he found this piece of road not only good, but excellent and improving all the time, until in the autumn it was as good a dirt road as any one could want.

The other day the Spectator chanced to meet the overseer of the district-the same overseer, by the way, who has had charge for 25 years past. "I wish to

STONE CULVERT.

[From Good Roads.] congratulate you, Mr. Overseer," said the Spectator, "on the good road you have made. It is fine, fine!" The rugged face of the overseer was wreathed in smiles, and his cheeks glowed with pleasure. Then, as he spoke, his look became serious.

"Well, I tell you how it was, Mr. Spectator. Last fall I took a drive down Blank"-naming a large town 60 miles away and three counties off-"and I seen some roads that made me ashamed of the old mudholes up here, and I says to myself, 'If ever I work the roads of my district again, I will have good roads too.' So I asked 'em how they did it, and, by George, they tell me that they didn't do nothin but keep the stones outen the road, keep the sods off, and open up the ditches so as the roads wouldn't wash. And that's all I done this spring, but I kept on a-doin it, and though we had the worst washes this summer I ever see, the roads in my district have been better than they ever was afore. Next year," he continued, 'I mean to tell the town committee that I will take a mile more of road, and don't want no more money than I been gettin." Now, on this little excursion from home, this honest old farmer had learned the real secret of road making, and he had had the sense to apply it when he resumed work in his district. Water is at once the most destructive and the most beneficial force that the road maker and the road repairer has to contend with and to count on. If it be harnessed, so to speak, it can be made to keep the roads clean and smooth and hard; if it of any case of Kidney or be uncontrolled, it is sure to wash the roads into ruts and make them all but Bladder disease that is not impassable. Drainage is the most essential feature of a road, and in most instances this is simplicity itself. In the Spectator's experience he has rarely come across a country road maker ease or Diabetes. There is who did not believe that the sods taken ont of the side ditches should be put into the road to be ground up into dust by the wagon wheels, converted into mud by the rains and finally washed back Into the ditches again. This process of road repairing does no good at any time, as the road so worked is usually-indeed, in nine cases out of ten-better when the repairer puts his hurtful hand upon it than at any other time.

It is so easy to make a good dirt road and to keep it in order that it seems ever a wonder to the Spectator that in this country, where the people plume themselves upon their ingenuity and adaptability, they should keep on being stupid in this very important matter of road repairing. The Spectator knows from actual experience that in the average country neighborhood the roads can be kept in most excellent order ten months in the year with the money that is now spent on them. If elementary instruction in drainage could be given to playfully to him. She was always sweet the overseers of the roads, then the and always beautiful, and every one said powers of nature, now only destructive. powers of nature, now only destructive, could be made to do most of the necessary work of road repairing. The spring rains can be made to do the work of road scrapers, and the summer rains will more frequently than not suffice to keep the roads moderately free from dust.

A good dirt road should have a slight erown, so that the water will drain each way from the center to the side ditch. and there should be no intervening strip of sod between the roadway and the ditch. The second requirement is most important, and it is almost universally disregarded. The sod is tougher than lirt, and it also becomes higher. The grass being permitted to grow, its edge forms a ridge which interrupts the drainage, and then, when the rainfall is heavy, there is sure to be a gully above the ditch-a gully which in a little while will extend into the roadway and make it more or less impassable. The crown to a dirt road, or to any road for that matter, should be higher on a grade or hill than on a level stretch. damage. Therefore it should be diverted from the surface of the road even more quickly at such places than where the Miss Knowit All-I saw you out drivgrade is level. These few simple engineering principles, it seems to the Spectator, could be inculcated and the rural population relieved of a very heavy burden without any cost what ever in the first instance -Outlook
