Can any man say that the repeal of the lien law was not a mistake when it cost the State twenty thousand dollars to repeal it, and the Legislature enacted a mortgage law that is just the same thing that we had before? In the next place, there was a great hue and cry raised among some of the farmers that they could better control labor if the lien law was repealed. Have they done it? No, no, a thousand times no. There has been more violations of contracts this year than was ever known in the history of the country, and there are more idle negroes walking around now than was ever known before, and they will walk up to a white man's door—it doesn't matter how grassy walking around now than was ever known before, and they will walk up to a white man's door—it doesn't matter how grassy his crop is—and tell him that they won't hit a lick for less than seventy-five cents a day and three meals. Where is your mort-gage law, Brother Farmers? How much good has it done you in the way of con-trolling labor? I guess you feel like the Irishman who went to the monkey show, and just about the time the show com-menced the monkey died; the Irishman a disposition to hold them to a personal ac-countability if in their judgment it should become necessary to reprimand or punish any of our children—and likewise encour-age those self-sacrificing ladies who have accomplished so much in the way of estab-lishing a first-class public library in our midst, and thus truly merit the title, for our dear old town, which we should all as-pire to, that of being regarded as the "Athens of South Carolina," not, forsooth, because of its proximity to the city of Ath-ens over in Georgia, but because of the fact that it is the centre of learning, culture and refinement. menced the monkey died; the Irishman said to the bystanders: "Faith and be-criste! the monkey is dead, and the show is all over—our money is dead, and the show is all over—our money is gone and we are that much poorer." So our twenty thou-sand dollars that the Legislature spent to repeal the lien law is gone, and the State is that much poorer. and refinement. 4th.

It seems to me that it would be of as much importance to the people for the Legislature to make some changes in the vitation to all good people, no matter from whence they may come, to settle amongst us, pledging ourselves that nothing shall be tolerated calculated in the least to grate laws we already have as to make new ones.
