Miss Winton Parks.

Miss Winton Parks of the State Normal School at Rock Hill is visiting her friend, Mrs. C. C. Gambrell.

For years Miss Parks taught in the Abbeville City Schools. She was a pioneer in primary work, and is to-day one of the best primary teachers in the South.

The State has not paid and will never be able to pay the debts it owes such teachers as Miss Winton Parks. They accomplish work that no man, even tho he has the intellect of a Webster, can accomplish. No one but a woman who knows child nature

The people of Abbeville were sorry to ose Miss Parks, and yet they have not lost her altogether. Her work still goes on, and tho it is in another county yet the reflex influence of her labors is telling to-day on the schools of this county and every other county of the State. Her sphere of usefulness has only been widened. "Give her of the fruit of her hands and let her own works praise her within the gates.

MR. E. A. THOMPSON.

To be Pell City's Next Mayor.

Forty qualified voters, representing more than half the voting strength have equested the mayor and elerk to print the one of Mr. E. A. Thompson on the or mayor of Pell City for the election on rd Monday in September. Mr. Thompson is the man for the place. He has abundant energy, wide experience and his ripened judgment at the helm of ocal municipal affairs will be of great enclit to insure a wise and progressive administration of the town's affairs. It is not likely that Mr. Thompson will ave any opposition as no politics is mixed up in the campaign. His nomination omes unsolicited by him and represents he wishes of the great majority of all people and parties.

Candidates for the council and school soand are now expected to be handing in heir names to the authorities and several have been mentioned in this connection. Politics will be also eliminated in these races in the effort to get the very strongest men in office and continue the busine of the city on a non-partizan basis as it ought to be.—Pell City Progress, Ala.

HE FOUND THE MAN.

In my early days I was a reporter on The Clarion Call. Only a dislike to own myself beaten and the occasional fascinaquent discomfort kept me in the office. But all this was before the day I was sent to interview the wife and daughter of the man who had just disturbed society by disappearing from it. Mr. Grey, so it had been learned from the notices concerning his disappearance, had one evening after dinner gone out for a stroll around the block. He had never come back. His family was of course prostrated after the manner of families on such sad occasions. After giving him time to come back, sending to his clubs, his office and the houses of his friends his wife had finally told his lawyers, and systematic search was begun. The family had recired from public life and denied themselves to every one, consequently my chances for an interview with Mrs. Grey did not see hopeful, but the city editor's air of granting me the opportunity I had been longing for made me loath to admit my fears.

I took the train for the Greys' -they lived a little way out of town-and prepared myself to meet the servants' scorn and the other attendant evils of such an assignment. The coach was an ordinary one, and there were several laboring men in it, evidently traveling to some suburb where they were to work upon the roads, for they carried pickaxes and shovels. There sat opposite me and slightly forward a peculiar type of man to whom I found my gaze wandering every few minutes. His iron gray hair was thick and very unevenly out. His face was covered with a stubbly growth of gray beard. He looked unwashed, unkempt and generally unpleasant. His blue overalls were stained with red clay and his red flannel shirt opened at the front in a way that revealed anything but a beautiful neck, burned and blistered. But the man's twitching lips and convulsive movements of the jaws attracted my attention, and his deep set. steely blue eyes that burned in cavernou sockets fascinated me. He did not talk to the other men, but sat with his head sunk upon his breast, only occasionally raising it to cast a look about him. He, with the other laborers, left the train at Forestville, where the Greys lived, and I soon saw them, under the direction of a foreman, assigned to make various road repairs.

Of course Mrs. Grey would not see me I sat in the library while the servant took my card to her, for there were other callers in the drawing room. Over the mante hung a picture, presumably Mrs. Grey, done in oil. She was as beautiful as a cameo and as hard. Opposite her was the portrait of a clean shaven man, with fine iron gray hair brushed off his foreheadmore plebelan cast of countenance, but strong and interesting. The face seemed familiar. I stared at it until the servant returned.

"Mrs. Grey is sorry, miss, but she can see no one, and has nothing to say for "Very well," said I. Then I rose to go. "Is that Mr. Grey?" I asked, nodding

"Yes, miss," was the reply, and suddenly it flashed upon me where I had seen those deep set, curiously shaped, keen blue eyes. My heart leaped almost into my mouth. I took one long look at the portrait and left the house.

The men were repairing the road, and I noticed one of the workmen whose face startled me. The resemblance to the portrait I had seen of Mr. Grey was remarka-ble. He worked with a flerce delight in the severe labor. His face seemed more mad than ever, with the exultation of motion and strength deepening the gleam in

There was a telegraph office at the end of the street. I sent a message to the city "Send a man to Forestville at once," was my command. Then while I paced the street and walked about the square I reflected upon the welcome I would receive if I had made a mistake. Every minute I became more and more convinced that I had made the most colos sal blunder on record. By the time Mr. Ellington Ellsworth, the only man who happened to be available when n gram was received, had arrived I was nearly hysterical. I told Mr. Ellsworth my theory, and he was properly skeptical. He discouraged me thoroughly in about two minutes, but I suddenly rallied. "Well." I remarked, taking command, "I want you to keep that man in sight. I shall go to town and get his lawyer. Find out what train they go in on, and I'll meet you.' Mr. Ellsworth didn't wish to act upon that suggestion, but he finally consented to do so. I went in, summoned Mr. Grey's lawyer and with him met the workingmen's train. Mr. Ellsworth, looking bored and unhappy, got out and point ed out our suspected his lawyer. My heart stood in my mouth. Was I to be forever disgraced or made famous forever?

"Mr. Grey," said the lawyer, stepping forward, "what does this mean?" And when I saw the man start wildly I knew that I was not forever disgraced.

"Well." said the city editor jovially, what did they say?" "They didn't say anything. They didn't

"So you didn't get the interview?" the city editor shortly.
"No," I replied meekly, "but I found the missing man. And now, such is the irony of fate, the city editor, instead of letting me rest on my laurels, is always exhorting me to live up to the reputation I made in the Grey case, when I found the missing man learned how overwork had worn out his brain and how in his half crazed condition he wandered away and returned to his original occupation in life, to the horror of his wife with the cameolike face. If only I had never been so brilliant!- Ex-

He Preferred Death. Baron de Malortie, a German who had served in Mexico with Maximilian, told te Sir M. Grant Duff, who records it in his
