CHAPTER XIV.

Peg in England.

HOW long have you been here? again asked Ethel of Peg. 'Sure I only came in this mornit.'

Peg Bent Down Over Michael.

The card Mr. Hawkes had given her, which Michael immediately attempted to take possession of. Peg snatched it away from the dog and handed it to the young lady. 'He told me to wait there!'

'The servant's quarters are at the back of the house.' 'Are they?' asked Peg without moving and not in any way taking the statement to refer to her.

Alaric dashed to the door and opened it as though to speed the visitor on his way.

Ethel Turned and Seated Herself.

Always delighted to see you—delighted. Is the angel wife all well? 'Brent bowed. 'Thank you.'

'Please give my remembrances to your mother.' Then he passed out. As he disappeared the irrepressible Alaric called after him:

'Certainly. She'll be so disappointed not to have seen you. Run in any time—any time at all.'

'Well, is it good news?' queried Alaric. 'Then, for heaven's sake, get at it. You've got me all clammy. We could do with a little good news. Wait a minute! Is it by any chance about the bank?'

'No,' replied Mr. Hawkes. He cleared his throat and said solemnly and impressively to Mrs. Chichester:

CHAPTER XV. The Will.

NOW, in Mr. Kingsnorth's will, went on the lawyer, producing a leather pocketbook filled with important looking papers—'in his will'—he repeated.

'Do you remember, mater, we met him at Victoria station once when I was little more than a baby? Yet I can see him now as plainly as if it were yesterday—a portly, sandy haired old buck with three jolly chins.'

'With death approaching,' resumed Hawkes, 'Mr. Kingsnorth's conscience began to trouble him, and the remembrance of his treatment of his unfortunate sister distressed him.'
