MRS. WILSON KNITS.

Other women less informal than Mrs. Wilson may have been temporarily misled by false rumors about the unimportance of knitting. Mrs. Wilson knows too much not to know how greatly needed knitting is, not to know that any remark which is interpreted as meaning that this work is superfluous is a remark misinterpreted. She knows what her husband knows, what Secretary Baker and Secretary Daniels know, that for every reason this work must go on. She knows that our soldiers must have their bodies warmed by these woolen garments and their hearts warmed for their grim task by the evidence that the women of America are co-operating with them.

So Mrs. Wilson knits continually. Here are serious duties, duties which at times touch the very nerve and purpose of this war, but grave and exacting and momentous as these duties are, they do not minimize to her understanding the urgent necessity of making just as many knitted soldier garments as she can.

All the women who surround her knit. Her mother, Mrs. Bolling, has come to for dinner, and after dinner she knits. Miss Bones is knitting practically every evening, and much in the intervals of a busy day. Mrs. McAdeo knits when she drops in for an evening call. If Miss Margaret Wilson is not knitting it is because she is in continual travel on concert tours in the interest of the Red Cross.

If there are women from out of town, they, too, are knitting, and that friend who makes a suggestion that will expedite or improve work is gratefully remembered. What would happen to a woman caller who shouldn't knit is pure speculation, for none has had the temerity to try the experiment. The "order of the day" in the White House, is, "Knit and keep on knitting."
If any American soldier shivers with cold at home or abroad it will not be the fault of Mrs. Wilson and her household. They are "doing their bit" as fast as deft hands can.—Stockton Axon, Brother-in-law of President Wilson.

Teach Children To Save

Start the kiddies right by making them want to save their money. A personal savings account in a high-class banking institution like this, where children are given the proper attention and encouragement to handle their own finances is a good start in the right direction. One dollar opens an account.
