LEE AND JACKSON.

Wilmington, S. C., Aug. 15, 1918.
My dear Mr. Greene:

In hunting among my old letters yesterday I come across the poem I enclose to you. I have no recollection of what paper I cut it out of nor how long since. It is about the two great immortals, Lee and Jackson. If I had to pronounce a eulogy over them I would repeat Mark Anthony's over Caesar. God never made but one Caesar and he would never make another. I was with them in places that it was hard for me to manage my legs.

The next great man is the immortal Hampton. I don't think any soldier could act the coward when in his presence. He had a superhuman look when the musket ball was flying and the cannon balls were raking the trees over his head. This I saw and can never forget.

Well, to go back to the poem, I can't tell you how often I had to stop and wipe the tears out of my eyes when reading it.

You are to be the judge about publishing it in the Press and Banner. Sincerely yours,
W. E. Link.

Lee At Jackson's Grave.

I've a picture in my attic, hanging on the dingy wall,
And I oftentimes go to see it when the length'ning shadows fall;
I lift it from the rusty nail and brush the dust away,
And then I see a soldier in a uniform of gray:
In his hand a wreath of roses, on his brow a look of care,
As he lays it o'er the bosom of his comrade sleeping there,
At the margin of the picture just above the classic mould,
There appears a faint inscription on the canvas gray and old;
But I should not dare restore it, 'tis the dear old name I'd save,
And my heart aches when I read it,
"Lee at Stonewall Jackson's grave."
Seems a phantom voice is speaking,
and I hear a faint good-by;

Seems across the sombre stillness zephyrs bear the sweet reply:

O, Jackson, I am watching
'Neath the shadow of thy tomb;
But, Jackson, I'll be with thee
Where eternal roses bloom!

I saw thee in the valley where the vapors kist the sun,
As gorgeous as old Austerlitz that charmed Napoleon;
O, that beautiful May morning, on us ambient sunbeams fell—
Fell upon the last fond meeting—
O, my comrade, fare-thee-well.
But in spirit I was with thee, felt thy throbbing heart a-tune
To the song of Shenandoah, rippling 'neath the silver moon;
With thee on the eve of battle when the camp-fires lit the sky,
And the soldier in his bosom pinn'd his sweetheart's last good-by!
At the sounding of reveille when the shells around thee screamed,
I beheld the empty saddles where the belching cannon gleamed;
Yes, I saw thee in the valley, where thy blood the verdure kist,
Bivouacked beneath the starlight there my soul was keeping tryst

O, Jackson, I am watching,
Where the myrtles round thee creep,
But, Jackson, I'll be with thee
Where none sorrow, where none weep.

There at Chancellorsville I watched thee, raised to Heav'n thy cherished name.

When thy dash at Hooker's right engulfed it in a sea of flame;
But on, that fatal reconnoitering, when thy comrades knew thee not,

There thy soul received the summons and thy noble breast the shot;
There the steel thy bosom shattered—

O, forgive, they did not know—
Would that thou had'st died in battle with thy face against the foe (Wilburn, Wilburn, he is falling;
See, he drops the bridle rein!
Lend thy shoulder. Blood upon it?
Thou are honor'd by the stain!
O, Fatality, thou mystery; why should love destroy her own?
