Good Roads and Trees.

The interest in good roads is growing all over the country, and the new policy of the American Forestry Association to link together the causes of good roads and forestry is certain to be received as good news. The association is advocating the setting out of trees along the public roads as memorials to the soldiers. The trees will be of great benefit to the roads, and that method of honoring the soldiers seems peculiarly appropriate. Just think of a beautiful growing tree by the side of a well-kept highway and a marble slab near the tree giving the name and other information of some soldier who gave his life for the principles of democracy and justice! The trees will also add to the pleasure of driving along the roads. The suggestion should be extensively carried out.—Christian Advocate.
