LIFE FOR MOST WOMEN IS NOTHING BUT A MAN HUNT

Marriage is not essential to feminine happiness, but if a woman intends to marry—or obtain a divorce—she should give to the subject the same careful study that preparation for a career as teacher, stenographer or nurse would entail.

This is the firm belief of Miss Louise Connolly, educational expert of Newark, N. J., who has recently given several lectures in New York under the serial title of "Fireside Conferences on Life, Love and Literature."

Miss Connolly, although free from any matrimonial bonds, has become through prolonged study an authority on problems and methods of mating. Although regarding marriage as hardly necessary, Miss Connolly bows to the existence of fact by asserting that "life for most women is a manhunt." Some women, she asserts, hunt instinctively—as a wolf stalks its prey. When the instinctive woman finds the man she wants, Miss Connolly says, "she envelops him, digests him and marries him, and the male never knows how it happened." Other women not blessed with the "hunting instinct," must use artifice to achieve matrimony, and to these Miss Connolly gives advice.

"For the first time in the history of woman," says Miss Connolly, "she is able to play a part in the choosing of her mate. Today she is on the road to economic independence. She knows that if she does not marry she will be able to provide for herself. This is better than a loveless marriage.

"You might say this is a subject about which I know nothing," she added, her brown eyes twinkling; "but I am not so sure about that. They say nobody loves a fat man. I don't know about that; but I do know that all the world seems to tell their confidences to a stout woman like myself. I may not be so awfully wise; but for years and years people have been coming to me and telling me these things. I've been teaching for more than 30 years, and in that time there has been an endless chain. Mothers of pupils would come to me and tell me their troubles with their husbands, and husbands would come and tell me their troubles with their wives. Then the pupils would come to me, and I would see the effect of their parents' troubles on them. And sometimes the grandchildren would come, and I could trace it all out clear down to them as well."

As further proof of her qualifications, Miss Connolly pointed to a stack of books which she has studied. Among them were "Love and Ethics," by Ellen Key; Robert Horton's "The Art of Living Together"; "Love and the Soul Makers," by Mary Austin; "Marriage and Divorce," by Felix Adler; Cicely Hamilton's "Marriage as a Trade," and a host of others.

Through her experiences and her research Miss Connolly has evolved quite definite ideas about marriage, but she admits that she has come to no positive conclusion as to divorce. "I must admit I have always had very strict ideas about these subjects," she said; "and yet I know it is easy for the person who never wore tight shoes to tell the person who has what to day."

For the young miss who wears a black court-plaster beauty patch under the left eye and just can't quite make either that eye or its mate behave when prepossessing young men are in the vicinity. Miss Connolly has considerable sympathy.

"She doesn't necessarily mean any harm in flirting," she said; "nor does it mean she is trying to marry the young man with whom she is trying to flirt. All she wants is a pleasant time, and she doesn't mean any harm by it."

Platonic friendship is a perfectly natural and possible thing, Miss Connolly asserts.

Miss Connolly said that some women know instinctively when they see the man they want to marry. Such women are rare, however, she adds. Too much novel-reading has, in part, destroyed woman's natural instinct in regard to her mate. Some women really are incapable of telling which man they really love, according to Miss Connolly.

Not only the reading of too many novels, but the drama has done much to change the attitude of the woman of today on love and marriage, Miss Connolly believes.

"When a man proposes to her," she said, "the girl is thinking all the time of what would be her answer if they were in a play. She doesn't want to fall down on her part. The same is also true of the man. Well, that's part of the price we pay for being so civilized, I suppose."

Miss Connolly has still one further piece of advice to give to the fair sex who would know all there is to know on "Mating or Getting Away With Him."

"Don't let him know that you want to marry him," she warns you. "If he finds that out he will probably be scared to death."—Baltimore American.

DECLARES AGENT OF TWO BIG CONCERNS PLANNED CAMPAIGN

Grand Rapids, Mich., Feb. 2.—The fraudulent election conspiracy which the government charges against United States Senator Newberry and his co-defendants, had its inception in New York in 1917, according to the opening statement which Frank C. Dailey, assistant attorney general, made to the jury in federal court here today. He named Senator Newberry and Frederick Cody whom he described as "a legislative agent for large corporations, particularly the American Telephone and Telegraph company and the American Book company," as the men who made the "preliminary arrangements," he added:

"They had determined to purchase the United States senatorship in Michigan for Mr. Newberry."

Mr. Dailey told the jury the senator was then on "patriotic work" in New York City as a lieutenant commander in the navy, adding that the American Book company "was largely controlled by the Barnes family, to which Mr. Newberry was related by marriage."

Mr. Dailey said Cody was commissioned to hire a manager for the campaign and that J. G. Hayden, Washington correspondent of the Detroit News, was offered $500 a month but refused the position because "he did not want that kind of a job." Mr. Dailey said solicitations of Hayden ceased suddenly after the latter had advised Mr.

Newberry "not to conduct a barrel campaign."

Mr. Dailey then shifted the scene to Detroit, where he said in February there was a conference of Michigan politicians known as "Cody men." This conference, he said, selected Paul H. King, one of the defendants, as manager of the campaign.

Posed for Movies. "During the campaign," said Mr. Dailey, "Mr. King visited practically every county in Michigan. He employed many general agents and paid out a vast sum of money."

The prosecutor then sketched the publicity campaign of the Newberry organization, charging that they sought advertising space in "every newspaper and magazine in the state." He named several publications in which he said the advertising appeared, including Russian, Finnish, Italian and Hungarian newspapers, "and some published in the German language."

He then turned to the use of moving pictures, saying Thomas R. Phillips, of Detroit, one of the defendants, was sent to New York to negotiate for them.

"Phillips purchased about 1,000 feet of an old film showing a review of the United States navy," said Mr. Dailey. "The sub-titles were changed so as to make the pictures applicable to the propaganda for which they were intended. Mr. Phillips also employed a moving picture company to take 125 feet of new films."

"Mr. Newberry posed in various attitudes in the new film. He went to a battleship located on dry land in a New York park and stood on the bridge of the ship and turned slowly to face the audience while the camera caught him in this attitude."

"He next played that he was paying a visit of inspection to this battleship."

"To divert attention from the fact that the film was a Newberry advertisement and render it more misleading, the film terminated with an appeal for enlistments in the navy."
