

Poetic Necess.

THE EVENING WIND.

BY MARY EMILY JACKSON.

I hear thee, oh, thou rushing wind!
Thou hast sweet tones for me,
Now bearing on thy mighty wings
Glad sounds from land and sea.

Thou'st been amid the orange flowers,
By India's groves and vines;
And from the North thou bringest back
The rustlings of its pines.

I hear thee as thy mighty wings
Sweep through the hollow sky;
Thou'rt from the forests of the West,
Where ruined cities lie;

Thou'rt bringing on thy scented breath
The long-exulting shout
Of the Indian in his savage wrath,
When the battle-cry is out;

Yet not for me, oh not for me,
Thou has a sound of fear,
Though in thy voice is many a tone,
The weary quake to hear;

And thou hast made thy weary way
By ruins of the Past,
Quick and unseen, where each deep spell
Of witchery is cast;

Oh, would that I might flee,
O'er every bright and sunny spot
Where thou hast trod, with thee
To gather in Earth's nobler things,

My thoughts are in my native land,
My heart is in my native place,
Where willows bend to breezes bland,
And kiss the river's rippling face.

My thoughts are with my youthful days,
When sin and grief were but a name;
When every field had golden ways,
And pleasure with the day-light came.

I bled the rushes to my feet,
And sought the water's silent flow,
I moved along the thin ice fleet,
Nor thought upon the death below.

In God's own house, on God's own day,
In neat attire, I bent the knee;
Pure sense of duty made me pray—
Joy made me join the melody.

And still my soul shall these command,
While sorrow writes upon my face;
My thoughts are on my native land,
My heart is in my native place.

DOWN AT COOMBS'.—While lecturing in the eastern section of Massachusetts, says a distinguished lecturer on temperance, I met a man in the road one day, who had been one of my audience the day before, and though an entire stranger, he accosted me with the question—

"Did you say, sir, yesterday; that ardent spirit is injurious and poisonous to the human system?"
"I did say so," I replied.
"Well our doctor says he thinks they are beneficial, if not taken to excess."

Excellent Advice.—Never attribute sinister motives to a person because you do not understand his actions.—Allow him the best motives, and you will be right in a large majority of cases; and, even when you err, it will be on the side of charity, the greatest virtue that man possesses.

Anecdote.—At a late Temperance Convention is one of our towns the hotels being somewhat crowded, a couple of men called at a private dwelling to get accommodated for the night.

The man of the house coming in soon after they had departed, inquired of his active and bustling helpmate the cause of such unusual haste—and preparation.
"Why, lau," replied she, "don't you think we're going to have a couple of total absent Alligators here to supper and—"

Public Notice.
To the Honorable the Senators and Members of the House of Representatives of the Legislature of the State of S. Carolina.

THE humble petition of James Harper and his associates, residing in Augusta, Georgia, respectfully shew unto your Honorable bodies, that under a charter from the State of Georgia, they have commenced the erection of a Bridge over the Savannah River at a point opposite the upper part of the city of Augusta, and about one mile above the town of Hamburg, in South Carolina, that within ten miles of the site just mentioned, are the F. W. Garret, Esq. above at Campbelltown; the bridge of the Bank of Georgia, and the Sand Bar Ferry below; your petitioners respectfully shew unto your Honorable bodies, that the erection of the said Bridge is demanded by the public convenience of a large portion of both the States of South Carolina and Georgia; that it will shorten and improve in point of roads the great South Western route which passes through Augusta, and will greatly benefit the citizens of the upper Districts of South Carolina, in affording them a more direct access to an additional market for their produce. Wherefore they pray your Honorable bodies to grant them a Charter for the erection of said Bridge within the jurisdiction of the State of South Carolina, upon the usual terms, and they will ever pray &c.
