pendence on the charity and benevolence of the community.

I regret to communicate to you the resignation of the late President of our College, whose sphere of usefulness, in that high and dignified station, has been occupied with such decided and distinguished benefit to the institution, and to the State. Under his wise and judicious control, its literary character has not only been more than fully sustained, both in the acquirements of the Students, and the ability of the Professors, but its morals have at the same time advanced to a state of purity and improvement, which it is believed has never been surpassed, in the experience of this or any other seminary. Deeply regretting the loss, as well as the circumstances which have deprived us of his services, we may still confidently hope that his character and example are so indelibly impressed upon the institution, and its successive generations of youth, that its lingering influences will continue to guide and to actuate it, in the same honorable course of virtue and success. I need not, I trust, recommend to your continued favor and patronage, an institution, whose enlightened contributions have extended to every pursuit and avocation—every art and science, as cultivated in our State—and whose influences have been diffused through all the walks and vocations of life, occupying every station in society, pervading every profession, and adorning the Bench, the Bar, the Pulpit, and our Legislative councils. The moral weight and influence which South Carolina has so long exercised, through the talents and usefulness of her statesmen, on the affairs of this Union, and which this institution has so largely contributed to preserve, is of itself an over-ruling inducement to foster and improve it.

Encouragements to promote agricultural improvements, has never received that consideration which their importance merits, from the Representatives of a people so entirely absorbed in the pursuit, and dependant upon the success, of that branch of industry, as are the citizens of this State. It would not be so much a matter of surprise (however improvident it might be regarded) if its interests had been so entirely neglected or overlooked, by the government of a community purely pastoral, or commercial. But in South Carolina, it is admitted to be the great, the absorbing, and almost the only productive interest; and our daily experience proves, that it is the constant aspiration of every other employment, to vest its accumulated earnings in its pursuit. In the economy of this State, it is the aliment of every other business and vocation. Its productions supply the traffic of the merchants, its requirements give employment to the professions; and its patriotism and industry contribute the larger portion of our revenue. Our statute books furnish ample evidence of a wise and provident regard to protect, as well as to promote, the interests of other classes and pursuits, by the limited partnerships, commercial regulations, and corporate privileges and franchises, which they have so liberally established. In the benefits of legislation, either partial or discriminative, to advance its peculiar interest, it does not comport with the independent character of the agricultural community, to desire to participate. But in the development of the wealth of the State—in the improvement of objects common to the enterprise and the interests of all—it might reasonably solicit and expect, the aid and patronage of our State Government. A Geological Survey of our mineral resources, (which chance and accident are every day so wonderfully developing,) a scientific analysis of the different soils, so important to their profitable and judicious culture, may I presume be considered among the general and legitimate objects to which legislative encouragement should be directed. The beneficial influence of the productive corporations and other new investments of capital, so usefully and successfully operating to promote the prosperity of the interior and upper portions of the State, are illustrative of the policy of instituting scientific researches, to enlighten and stimulate their labors in diversifying the pursuits of industry—in extracting, as well as diffusing, the permanent sources of wealth from the valuable ores and products of the earth—they have increased and multiplied the means of national prosperity, added to the comforts and conveniences of society, distributed new employments, and infused life, energy, and enterprise, into the habits and character of our people. A small annual appropriation to establish premiums, promotive of the objects to which the State Agricultural Society has so patriotically devoted its attention, would greatly contribute to aid its laudable exertions, to inspire the emulation, as well as to enlighten the experience, of our citizens The beneficial influence of legislative patronage, in such instances, may be illustrated by the successful example of those States, by whose experience it has been tested; and while it must necessarily tend to dignify, as well as to encourage, the great and important interest, upon the success of which the prosperity of this State so mainly depends, it is at the same time exempt, in my view, from those objections which may reasonably be urged, on principle, to the practice of conferring privileges, protection, immunities, or franchises, on particular classes or associations of citizens.

The last but not the least interesting topic to which I would invite your attention, is the delapidated and ruinous condition of the State House, and its appendages; the offices and basement apartment of which, are in a most cheerless and uncomfortable state of inconvenience, and decay. Venerable for the purpose it has subserved,—associated with the most important events, and the proudest recollections of the past—consecrated by the eloquence and the patriotism of which it has often been the scene and the occasion, it is well worthy of the pride and fostering care of those, into whose guardianship it has now descended The moral influence of a high State example, exercised in the wise economy of improving, as well as protecting, the property of the people and of the State, and in delighting to honor and embellish the ancient Halls of our ancestors and predecessors, is practically more effective to fix the attachment of our citizens on our institutions, and to stimulate the enterprise and emulation of the people to improve their individual comforts and resources, than all the speculative inducements, with either philosophy or legislation can proffer. We should therefore regard the mouldering effects of time, upon the venerable walls of our Capitol, with the same sedulous care, and reverential solicitude, to remove them, as we would defend and build up the breaches and innovations of lawless and ambitious encroachments, on the sacred barriers that surround the sovereignty and independence of the State.

JOHN P. RICHARDSON.

From the Hamburg Journal.

Business &c.—It is truly gratifying to the friends of Hamburg, when they witness the very large business doing in the various departments here. We need no longer doubt the prosperity of Hamburg, the heavy trade and activity of the citizens, and the bustle in the streets daily, prove with unerring truth, that Hamburg is going ahead. Heretofore, we looked upon the arrival one day of 6 or 700 bales of cotton, as something extraordinary, but now we are able to count over 1000 bales, and those who doubt it are referred to the warehouse books of last Thursday's date, they speak the facts.

Twentytwo years ago, and Hamburg, S. C, was not known; and the streets which are now alive with business and the bustle of the many people who crowd them, were a marsh—a retreat for reptile and a hiding place for ferocious animals. Now all is gay and bright. The tall oaks have bowed before the hand of our Founder, and a quagmire is become a garden, in which are marked off quarters for every one's taste. All this has been done by the perseverance of one man, without money, yet having perseverance and an indomitable spirit, which faltered not at difficulties.

Men may say what they please, and endeavor to refrain from acknowldging that which their own conscience says is the truth, but the world will give honor to whom it is due, Truth crushed to the earth will rise again with superior force and brilliancy. History points out no such an instance as this which this Founder of our city presents, who in the very teeth of a great and opulent city, together with what his enemies could do against him, has planted a city, where commerce flourishes and where millions or trade is transacted with the up country. He can look upon all this and say, I have done it, and my reward is yet to come.

State Agricultural Society and Cattle Show.—We are informed by a gentleman who was present at the great Cattle Show in Columbia, during the first week of the Legislature, that a finer exhibition of animals has never taken place in South Carolina.

The horses of Col. Hampton, consisting of stallions, mares, fillies, and yearlings, were of superior blood, form and beauty. The Show took p'ace in the yard in rear of the State House, which from 11 o'clock in the morning until 1 o'clock was thronged with members of the Society, the Legislature, and many respectable citizens of Columbia, and of the State generally, who testified by their animated looks, that they participated largely in the lively pleasure and exciting interest which such a scene was calculated to inspire. The pens of Dr. Parker, Col. Hamilton, Benjamin Taylor, John Preston, Dr. Perceval, and Dr. James Davis, presented for observation and comparison as fine specimens of Durham and Devonshire cattle, and their crosses; Berkshire hogs, Bakewell sheep, and some other breeds, (it is believed) as can be found in the United States.

Our enterprising and public spirited citizen, Captain Richard Ward, from the Ridge, exhibited a two year old bull and heifer of a superior size, form and keep. He received a Silver Cup as a premium for his Durham Bull. Maj. Felder and the Rev. Mr. Davis are entitled to high praise for their fine mule and mule colts.

To Col. Hampton, Taylor, and Davis, much praise is due for the public spirit, judgement and skill, which they have manifested in the importation of high blooded horses, cattle and sheep, and for their exertions for the improvement of the stock of the State. The meeting of the Society, and the exhibition of stock, will impart a new impulse to the whole agricultural community and lead to many efforts in the cause of agricultural improvement.

The distinguished gentleman, who presides over the Society upon being re-elected to the office of President, responded in a short but ardent and inspiring address, in which he pledged all his energies of mind and body, in the great paramount cause of reform and improvement in the agricultural condition of the State. On Thursday night in the Representative Hall of the State House, Genl. Hammond delivered to a numerous audience, one of the ablest and most instructive addresses, that has ever been listened to in that building. The Society adjourned in great harmony.

From our Correspondent.

COLUMBIA, Nov. 23.

The Legislature commenced its regular session yesterday, (Monday) the proceedings of the last day of the last Session was read, the roll was called, when a quorum was formed, and proceeded to business, a number of petitions were presented and notice given of the introduction of several Bills. In the Senate Judge Huger made a move upon the distribution of the proceeds of the sales of Public Lands

A Message was received from his Excellency the Governor to day at 1 o'clock, and read by his private secretary B T. Watts Esq it is a lengthy very able and well written document. Mr. Quattlebum of Lexington gave notice that on Tuesday next, he would introduce a Bill, to reduce all acts and clauses of acts in relation to the Militia of this State into one act, and to alter and amend the same, this is the same big Bill, as it is called that has been twice defeated before, by former Legislatures, and it is again brought before us, this winter. Judging from the feeling of the Members I am disposed to believe it will again receive the same fate, as heretofore.

There is a contrariety of opinions whether the State should receive her portion of the proceeds of the sale of the public lands, we cannot say at present what will be the result, there has been nothing of interest done yet. Upon all matters of importance I will write you.

November 24.

According to adjournment, the House met to day at 11 o'clock, a number of petitions were presented, and notices given of the introduction of several important bills. The Governor's Message was made the special order of the day, and disposed of—we are again to fight the battles of Protective Corporations, Brigade Encampments, Banks, &c., in a few days the session will become quite interesting. Mr. Dudly introduced a Resolution, which was made the special order for to-morrow, declaring Judge Gaunt's inability, from old age, to discharge the duties of his office, and that in the opinion of this Legislature, his office should be declared vacant. The resolution created some excitement in the House, and I have no doubt several speeches will be made both for and against it. On to-morrow the big Military bill will be read the first time; the friends of the bill will use every exertion to pass it, and if they should fail. I have no doubt a move will be made to abolish the whole Malitia System. There seems to be more opposition to the Encampment system than I anticipated, from the zeal which his Excellency the Governor manifested in his tour this summer, I had no doubt the System would be revived without any sort of difficulty, but it is very doubtful whether the bill will pass or not.
