EDGEFIELD C. H.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 7, 1848.

We are compelled to decline, but most respectfully, all selected articles for, or against the Bank of the State, which our friends or others may send. We will be highly pleased to receive original articles on either side, provided they are written in a courteous spirit. In coming to this resolution, we intend not the slightest disrespect to our friends or correspondents, but merely to exercise the peculiar privilege of all editors, in making our own selections.

We return our thanks to the Charleston Courier, and Evening News; Columbia Telegraph, South Carolinian, and Temperance Advocate, for their favors in the shape of Extra's, &c., which favors we hope they will continue.

New Post Office.—There has been a new Post Office established in Edgefield district, named "SALUDA," of which Wm. S. Smiley, Esqr., has been appointed Postmaster.

Court of Chancery.—The Court of Equity, commenced its session at this place on Monday last, Chancellor Caldwell, presiding.

Treaty with Mexico.—From the extracts which we publish to-day, it will be seen, that in all probability a Treaty of Peace with Mexico, has been ratified. All doubts will be removed very speedily.

General Scott.—On a recent visit to the city of New York, General Scott met with a most flattering reception.

Santa Anna.—This distinguished Mexican has arrived at Kingston Jamaica, on the 5th of May.

President Polk.—During the session of the late Democratic Convention, Mr. Polk addressed a letter to that body, declining a candidacy for nomination as President. This was in accordance with his often repeated declarations, and his letter in 1844, in which he stated, that he would not run for a second term. Among the resolutions of the Convention, we were much pleased with one expressing their high and undiminished confidence of the Democratic party in Mr. Polk. Upon the whole, he has certainly done well, and has redeemed his pledges. May he retire with the plaudits of his countrymen generally.

Wisconsin.—This State recently admitted into the Union, voted at the late Democratic Convention nominating President and Vice President.

Trial in Mexico.—At a court recently in Mexico, for the trial of those United States officers and soldiers who were implicated in a robbery and murder in the city of Mexico; several were found guilty and sentenced to be hung. Among those to be hung, are Lieutenants Hare, Dutton, Tilden, and Lafferty. Some it not all of these were excellent soldiers. Lieutenant H. was distinguished for his gallantry particularly. The fate of these men is melancholy indeed.

Population of the United States.—According to the Patent Report, the population of the United States amounts to something over twenty millions. The next census which will soon be taken, will show a much larger number than this, if we are not greatly deceived.

We have received a catalogue of the officers and students of the University of the State of Alabama, 1848. The number of students amounts to 93. The College is governed by 9 Trustees, and has a Faculty of 7 Professors and 2 Tutors. The Rev. Basil Manley, is President of the College. The course of instruction is thorough, and the facilities for acquiring a complete education are sufficient. The expense for the College course appear to be very reasonable. We have no doubt but that this institution has effected much good for Alabama, and that it will continue to do so.

The venerable Mrs. Madison.—This truly excellent and distinguished lady has entered upon her 82d year. The bill for paying her a handsome sum for the remaining manuscripts of her husband now only awaits the signature of the President to become a law. These papers are of the most valuable character, and are richly worth the sum paid by the government for them. The purchase of these also, affords relief to the widow of President Madison, and will place her in all probability far above the reach of want.

Important from Mexico.
PEACE CONCLUDED!!
THE ARMY TO BE REMOVED.
By special Express to Columbia Daily Telegraph—one day in advance of Mail. [Telegraphed to the Mobile Herald.]
We received this morning a despatch from the Delta office containing important news from Mexico, by the steamship Edith, which arrived this morning at New Orleans. Letters from "Mustang" were received up to the 21st inst. from the city of Mexico.

The Treaty was ratified by the Chamber of Deputies on the 19th inst. at six and a quarter o'clock, p. m. The vote was 51 to 35. In the other branch of Congress there is no doubt that it will be approved by a comparatively much larger vote.

Orders had been issued for the calling in of the outposts of the army, and they were expected to march for the coast between the 1st and 15th of June.

Gen. Persifer F. Smith has been appointed superintendent of the embarkation of the forces at Vera Cruz, and he was to leave the city of Mexico for the purpose of entering on this duty on the 24th inst.

REMINISCENCES OF THE PALMETTO REGIMENT.
LT. WHIT. BUTLER BROOKS.
NO. XIII.

By heaven, methinks, it were an easy leap,
To pluck bright honor from the pale face'd moon;
Or dive into the bottom of the deep,
Where fathom line could never touch the ground,
And pluck up drowned honor by the locks.

W. B. Brooks was the young Harry Percy of the Palmetto Regiment. With more years on his head, and with a broader field of action, he might have run a career in the field of arms, not less dazzling, perhaps, than that of his illustrious prototype himself. Within the narrow limits in which it was his destiny to act, he displayed qualities and performed deeds every way characteristic of the hero of Shakespear. Brave, gallant, impetuous, he was always ready to engage in the most hazardous enterprises, and never failed to exhibit in his conduct a noble bearing and brilliant courage. And while displaying the brilliant traits of a gallant warrior, he gave evidence of the many excellent qualities that characterize the true and polished gentleman. In the latter point of view, not less than in the former, he represented, in true spirit, the best specimen of the southern gentleman. With enough of aristocratic haughtiness to avoid all low associations, yet with affability of manners and strong social inclinations, tempered with chivalric sentiments and love of glory, he was open to the warmest attachments of friendship, and secured applause from his fellows with no greater effort than by the exhibition of that winning ease of manner entirely natural with him. If there was anything after his acknowledged gallantry, that rendered his character peculiarly striking, it was the strong element of gentlemanly principle that formed so prominent a feature in its composition. This was, indeed, a distinguishing mark with him. It was in his every act, and seemed to animate his every thought. Trace him through all the vicissitudes of a military life, through the various grades of a soldier's duties, from the implicit obedience required of him by the law, to the partial freedom of social revelry at times allowed, in its noblest development. You will see the same independence of character—the same ardent temperament—the same gentlemanly tone—the same chivalric bearing, displayed in all his acts, alike in the camp and on the field. As proof of what we state, may be adduced the testimony of all his comrades in arms, among whom he enjoyed great popularity. As evidence still stronger, is the fact, that his associations were by no means confined to his equals in rank. He obtained the favor and intimacy of those much above him in position, and whose every strict military etiquette did not positively forbid, he was admitted to all the privileges of equality and friendship. This may be regarded as a mark of decided merit, as it is very unusual in the army, where, in order to preserve proper discipline, a rigid enforcement of outward formality, is most strictly demanded. Governed by usual formality, in his subordinate station, he must have been excluded from equality of intercourse with those above him in rank; but by virtue of his intelligence, good breeding, & altogether gentlemanly deportment, he formed one of the few exceptions to favor in the close observance of military etiquette.

By this exhibition of qualities rarely united in one of his age, he exercised a very important influence in preserving order and decorum in the Regiment. In his example of strict obedience to the orders of his superiors, and in his readiness to condemn all low, riotous, or unbecoming conduct, he taught the young men around him a lesson of practical wisdom, highly important in the discharge of military duty. This spirit of obedience and order in a soldier is a virtue too shining in its qualities, too important in its effects not to draw forth praise and admiration.

In this brief analysis of conduct, we should not omit to mention the zeal and energy, which marked the character of young Brooks in the discharge of his military duties—qualities, he displayed in an eminent degree before leaving the scenes of his boyhood. It was in part by his instrumentality, aided in his efforts by others of his comrades, that the company from his native district was raised in time to be received into service. To effect this object, he wrought with the greatest activity. He rode by day and by night. He used persuasion upon persuasion. By his chivalric appeals, he worked on the imagination of his young friends in the district, who could not withstand their influence, and rallied under the banner of their country. But in his active zeal he had a damper to his feelings. An aged father, feeble in health, leaned upon him for mental support. He appealed to his filial affections; he begged him to remain. The son, in sorrow and in tears, implored for cons to go. The trial was severe. It required a sacrifice. The young man felt his honor pledged—and he considered it his duty to enroll. With a heavy heart, the father yielded him to his country's call, and invoked upon his head the blessings of Providence. We were present when this scene occurred in the Court House at Edgefield village, and an occasion of more deep and anxious excitement never happened within our recollection. The large assembly was filled with patriotic feeling, and fathers with tears in their eyes, and under deep emotions of inexpressible anxiety, gave up their sons to their country's service, in full view of the dreadful dangers by which they were to be surrounded. No one that day was tendered to his country of more noble bearing, of more genuine gallantry, than the young man of whom we have been writing.

To mark each act of his, deserving to be noted, during the campaign of '47, would find us beyond the limits of this notice. Suffice it to say, each was in character with the qualities of mind and heart we have ascribed to him. In all his dealings, and in his achievements, he was the soldier, the gentleman, and when occasion offered, the hero. Little opportunity to distinguish himself arose, until the army took up the line of march from Puebla to the city of Mexico. In the day's march before reaching Rio Frio, he was in command of the rear guard of the Palmetto Regiment, which, that day, was rear guard of the division. A small body of Dragons were still in rear of young Brooks. In passing from a plain into a mountain defile, after the regiment was lost sight of in a turn of a hill, the Guerrilleros sallied out from their hiding places upon this handful of men. The Dragons, who were first to be assailed, rode up at top-speed to give notice to young Brooks, and to hurry him to the main body of the regiment. The four or five men under his command had already commenced to retreat; but seeing the Guerrilleros very near at hand, and in the act of launching a Dragon, he ordered a halt, and instantly opened fire upon the enemy. By his own gallantry he inspired his little band with courage and resolution. They advanced boldly against the Guerrilleros, who were more than five times their number, and put them to flight. A poor Dragon lay almost lifeless on the ground. He soon afterwards died. This was the only injury sustained.

Information of this bold little encounter soon reached the head officers of the division, and created no little excitement among the men. That night at Rio Frio, Gen. Quitman and Shields sent for young Brooks. They heard from his own lips an account of the engagement. They commended him highly for his gallantry, and proffered their aid in securing him some handsome post in the army. From this time forward, he was known to the whole division, and noticed with favor by all the officers.

At the battle of Contreras he acted with great firmness and resolution. At Churubusco his conduct was worthy of the highest commendation. Here he displayed all the heroic powers of his nature. In the heat of the action his ardent nature became thoroughly aroused. His daring increased till it arose to impetuosity. While under cover of the hacienda, he burned for a charge upon the enemy. The occasional fall of a comrade augmented not a little his desire. To be shot at, and not to shoot again was more than his proud spirit could bear. He entreated his company commander to move on. His General rode in front and asked "who would follow him?" Young Brooks was among the first to respond eye to the call. At this moment his whole frame shook. His nerves trembled, and his eyes flashed fire. We can almost fancy him running over in his mind the spirited language of the impetuous Hotspur on a like occasion:

Now—Esperance!—Perry!—and set on—
Sound all the lofty instruments of war,
And by that music let us all embrace:
For, heaven to earth, some of us never shall
A second time do such a courtesy.

At the word of command, he stepped forward under great excitement; but with a resolution that proved to every one the stern purpose of his heart. Amid the tremendous fire of the enemy, a ball struck him near the centre of his chest, and he instantly fell. At the same moment, his chosen companion, his sworn friend for life, Lieut. David Adams, was at his side in the convulsions of death. Young Brooks wept for his friend, while he firmly believed his own end was rapidly approaching. But to his own, and to the surprise of the best of Surgeons of the army, he survive his wound forty-three days, and at length died in the city of Mexico.

The fortune he displayed during his illness, when he was hourly awaiting death, indicates clearly the true stamp of his character. He seemed to look death in the face with the same fearlessness with which he had, upon the armed ranks of the enemy. The same proud spirit—the same resolute and determined courage burned in his bosom, but stripped now by calm and quiet reflection, of its impetuous nature.

A few days before his death, he received intelligence of his appointment of Lieutenant in the 12th Infantry. Would that he had been spared to enjoy the honors that awaited him, and which he so richly merited!

RESIGNED.—General Cass, the Presidential nominee of the Democratic National Convention, resigned his seat as Senator, from Michigan, on the 30th ult.—Col. Tel.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATE IN THE BALTIC CONVENTION AFTER THE NOMINATIONS WERE MADE.—And the President declared that Lewis Cass, under the rules adopted by the Convention, was nominated as the candidate of the Democratic party for President of the United States.

Speeches were made by delegates from Pennsylvania, Maryland, New Hampshire, Tennessee, Connecticut and Maine, pledging their States respectively for majorities in favor of the nominee.

Mr. Yancey, of Alabama, said that State had three times voted for Andrew Jackson, twice for Martin Van Buren, and once for James K. Polk—never for a Whig, and never had she been a Whig State.—She will still adhere to principle, and when the principles of the platform upon which the nominee of this Convention is to go before the people had been laid down by the Convention, if those principles were in accordance to the instruction which Alabama had given to her delegates, Alabama would support that nominee.

Messrs. Winston, of Alabama, (delegate at large, with Mr. Yancey,) said the delegation from that State had come into the Convention as delegates, and as honorable men were bound to support its nominees. He understood, he thought, the State of Alabama well, and as one of the thirty States of the Union, she would not set up herself as a dictator in the rest of the Union. He belonged to no ultra set of factiousists at the South, who do as much harm as any other ultra set of factiousists at the North. He believed that Alabama would give her vote to the nominee of the Convention.

Mr. Porter King, of the same State, said Alabama would support the nominee. Only let the North do as the gentleman from Massachusetts had promised, and as a Democrat—though a young democrat—he would pledge that State to the nominee of the Convention.

Mr. Moore, of the same State looked upon Gen. Cass as one of the greatest and purest of American patriots. His services in the war of 1812, and his services during the war with Mexico, were known and appreciated in Alabama. Patriotic words, from the mouth of Lewis Cass, when those of opposition from other quarters came like lead to the hearts of our soldiers in Mexico, had sustained them in battle and cheered them on to victory. The State of Alabama would vote for Lewis Cass.

Mr. Jackson, of the same State; took a somewhat similar ground to that advanced by Mr. Yancey. He desired that, as in 1844, the Convention should lay down its platform of principles by that State, he would pledge her vote for the nominee of the Convention.

Mr. King, of the same State, said that North Alabama, the District from which he came, would give its support to Gen. Cass. He had come here knowing that that great pilot of the democratic party, James K. Polk, was about to leave the helm, and had looked about for one to supply his place, and North Alabama would be satisfied with the selection which had been made.

Mr. Bowden, of the same State, said he came here as the friend of the great and glorious Levi Woodbury—who had wintered with us and summered with us. They never had to ask where Levi Woodbury was. Alabama loves him; but because she loves him, she does not hate others. Whatever might be the result in other States, there was no doubt about Alabama—no more doubt than there was of Illinois. When Illinois quits the democratic party, there may be danger that Alabama will quit. He would say of his distinguished friend from Alabama (Mr. Yancey) that his virtue, is a virtue which runs too much to extremes. But he knew that he had no sympathy with whigs—that he was a democrat in principle and feeling.

Mr. Avant, of Tennessee, and Mr. McGuffin, of Kentucky, promised the votes of their States for the nominee.

It appeared, therefore, that the nomination of Gen. Cass was unanimously sustained by the delegates of the several States, with the exception of New York, Alabama and Florida, the former not having voted at all, and the two latter permitting their votes to stand as cast on the last ballot.

On motion, the Convention adjourned to 5 p. m.

AFTERNOON SESSION.
The Convention met, pursuant to adjournment, the President in the chair.

Mr. Foreman, of Georgia, offered the following preamble and resolutions, which were received amid much excitement:

Whereas that portion of the delegation from New York known as the Union Convention have withdrawn from the Convention; and that those members of the organization of the Convention, (commonly called the legitimate representation of New York, and six votes.)

Resolved, That this vote of the Wilmot proviso of New Hampshire, man against passing this Virginia, rose to a question of the resolution, as we had resolution conferring the tip on the Hunker delegation, that the resolution unnecessary, as they are members, in the absence of the contestants or Barnburners.

Mr. Foreman, at the request of several gentlemen, withdrew his resolution, disclaiming that his object and intention was to have an expression of opinion against the Wilmot proviso.

From the Greenville Mountaineer.
Mr. Editor:—There is no greater luxury to a weary traveller than a first rate Hotel; and in making a journey of only a few hundred miles, he finds so many in different ones, that I think it a public benefit to notice any decided improvement in the management of these useful establishments. I have been led to make these remarks for having recently spent three or four days at "American Hotel," in Hamburg, S. C., now and during the past year under the control of Mr. Wm. KETCHAM and his excellent lady, where I found as many real comforts as at any public house in the State. The rooms are large and airy, the furniture abundant and neat, the table well supplied, and (what is of the very first importance) a sufficient number of active, attentive and competent servants. The stables are fine, with good dirt floors—the hostler attentive and well acquainted with his business. And there is one other quality which this house possesses that will not be objected to by visitors, viz: the charges are certainly as low as any similar Hotel in the lower part of the State.

AN OLD TRAVELLER.
OBITUARY.
Departed this transitory life on the 25th day of May, BENJAMIN G. REAR, infant son of S. B. and Susan A. Ryan, aged about eight months. Sweet babe, by death's cold hand in earliest bloom,
Torn from thy mother's bosom to the tomb,
Whilst o'er thy grave thy drooping parents bend,
O may those parents bear a faithful friend;
Nor think thee only born to bequeath,
Pain at thy birth, and sorrow from thy death.
For when the great eternal day shall come,
Then shall they meet you at thy happier home,
And see their dear sweet pledge of mutual love,
Blooming in spotless innocence above.

Died on the 13th May, at his residence in Edgefield District, Mr. JOHN ROPEK, in the 42d year of his age; an industrious honest man, one who was entirely devoted to his own business, quite social, yet he cared but little for formality, even in his social relations; an affectionate husband and father, was very careful to educate his children, his family circle was truly his chief delight.

He had been a regular member of the Baptist Church of Christ seventeen years; his religious walk which was good, was distinguished by his generous and candid manner. The last two years of his life he was more or less afflicted with dyspepsia, and his business being more extensive, caused an effort against melancholy. He therefore at times appeared very cheerful and at other times quite depressed in feelings. The disease which ended his days on earth, I suppose was Phrenoma.
