COTTON SEED AS A MANURE.

Mr. Editor.—The great enriching properties of cotton seed as a manure, and its superior power of imparting an early impetus to the growth of plants, have been visible to all who have ever given them a fair trial. They need not be confined as a manure to any one article grown by the planter, but extended to almost every species of vegetation—corn, peas, cotton, vegetables, small grain and grapes—though not equally beneficial to all alike. From an experience of a few years the subscriber would advise their use on land designed for corn, in the quantity of 75 bushels to the acre, to be hauled out after the land is well fallowed, a few days before planting time, and deposited in piles of equal quantity and distance for convenience and facility in distributing them. The land being suitably prepared and ready for planting, the rows laid off by a shovel plow, opening broad and deep, the seed are then scattered from one end of the row to the other, with the corn dropped on them at such distance in the drill as the quality of the land will justify, say in medium or average land 2 1/2 feet apart, covered with a turning plow and harrowed off with an iron-tooth harrow. If the corn be planted and seed sown on it, the stand will be greatly endangered from the lint and heating quality of the seed, but by planting as advised, a stand will be secured. If a greater quantity of seed can be procured, the benefit desired will be more general and permanent to the land by scattering them broadcast, and plowing them in. Many contend that this manure is not felt longer than one year, but such persons, after exposing the seed all the winter, haul them in small piles and suffer them to remain from March until May, when they are removed to the corn hill, there deposited on the surface around the stalk and remain uncovered until wind, rain and sun dissipate its fertilizing properties. My own impression is, that its influence is felt for five years, independent of an increased quantity of vegetable matter returned to enrich the land. If the season proves suitable, by this plan of manuring in the drill, one may realize an hundred per cent. in the yield of corn; and the succeeding year, if planted in cotton, in reversing the beds, this very manure is thrown on the bed where the seeds are sown, enabling the plant to reap early benefit at a period, as generally acquiesced in by planters, when it requires more support than at any other, in order that its early growth and healthy condition may enable it to escape the ravages of lice, with which the plant is never attacked until enfeebled by cold or some other injurious cause. We are urged by many to manure exclusively for cotton. With such I think differently. The past year, ten acres were in cotton, where an hundred bushels of cotton seed were given to the acre, placed in the water furrow, and bedded upon them. The result was an increased growth, and moderate increase in yield, but not enough to justify such an expenditure of this valuable manure. The same year fifty acres were planted in cotton that had been grown three preceding years in corn and peas, manured each year with cotton seed, as advised, but none on it the year it was in cotton. The corn stalks had been cut up, and with the pea vines, regularly turned under. The land in both cuts well cultivated, and seasons alike. The soil of the ten acres was good, of a mulatto color, whilst that of the fifty acres was poor and hilly, with clay near the surface. The difference in the yield was fifty per cent. in favor of the fifty acre cut. This year I have ten acres planted in cotton with an hundred bushels of seed sown broadcast and plowed in; also, fifty acres, planted in cotton, which was in corn and peas the past year, measured with an hundred bushels in the acre in the drill, but none this year; the corn stalks cut up in several pieces, and with the pea vines turned under. Both cuts of land are similar in quality, and have been cultivated alike with like seasons. The stand on the ten acres is very imperfect and very irregular in its size, and has been much harassed by lice. The fifty acre cut is a good stand, quite regular in its size, has been free from lice, and presents altogether a thrifty appearance, and bids fair to yield fifty per cent. per acre more than the ten acre cut. From these remarks you will readily perceive that I prefer manuring with cotton seed for corn, instead of cotton; that we are better rewarded the second year to succeed it in cotton, and well compensated the first for our trouble. I do not pretend to say that the benefit is altogether attributable to the cotton seed, but to the change in the crop, together with the advantage of corn stalks and pea vines restoring the original susceptibility in the land to grow and produce good cotton. If those who disagree with me will give results from a better process of using this valuable manure, I shall be greatly obliged.

THE CULTIVATOR.

Devoted to the Interests of THE FARMER, THE GARDNER, AND THE FRUIT-GROWER, ILLUSTRATED WITH NUMEROUS ENGRAVINGS OF Houses, Barns, Farm Implements, Domestic Animals, Plants, Fruits, &c. &c.

THE CULTIVATOR enters upon its sixteenth volume, (the 6th of the "new series,") on the 1st of Jan., 1849. For a period of fifteen years, it has enjoyed a circulation, and exerted an influence, not exceeded it is believed, by any other Journal in the country. That its interest and usefulness have been sustained from year to year, we have the most abundant evidence in its large sales, notwithstanding the multiplicity of agricultural journals which have come into existence within the past few years. It will be our aim to render it for the future, not only worthy the support of our rural population, but absolutely necessary to all who would keep themselves well informed as to the progress of agricultural improvement, both at home and abroad. Keeping constantly in view the great object for which THE CULTIVATOR was established—"TO IMPROVE THE SOIL AND THE MIND,"—no effort will be spared to fill its pages with such matter as is best adapted to call into action the mental and physical energies of its readers,—to awaken inquiry as to the best and most profitable methods of farming, and to incite to efforts to carry them into effect.

Particular attention will be paid to Rural Architecture, and numerous Designs of Farm Buildings, Gates, Fences, and Ornamental Structures, will be given—to the department allotted to "THE GARDEN AND THE ORCHARD," which will be conducted by JOHN J. THOMAS, well known as the author of the "Fruit Culturist," and a practical Horticulturist of great skill;—to "Domestic and Rural Economy," and to the "Diseases of Animals," a subject of increasing interest to farmers.

TERMS.—For single copy, $1—for seven copies, $5—for fifteen copies, $10, and for any larger number at the same rate. All payments to be made in advance. All subscriptions to commence with the volume, and none received for less than a year.

Postmasters and others interested in Agricultural improvement in all parts of the Union, are respectfully invited to act as Agents for the Cultivator, and to send on clubs of subscribers for the vol. for 1849—Specimen Nos. and Prospectuses will be furnished to all postpaid applicants.

Albany, Dec. 1848.

HASTING'S COMPOUND SYRUP OF NAPIHTHA.

NOT only a positive and a warranted cure for consumption and all diseases of the lungs. This medicine has decided the dispute about the curability of consumption, and satisfied the medical faculty and all who have used it, that consumption and all affections of the lungs can not only be cured, but they are as easily and simply cured, as almost any of the disorders which afflict the human frame is liable.

The operation of a single bottle, which costs only $1, is sufficient to satisfy any patient—and all together to get gone with the disease—of this fact; and even a single dose gives evidence of eradicating the malarial by the immediate relief which it affords. This is not a quick or secret remedy. Dr. Hasting's discovery, is one of the most eminent physicians of the age, and has made a full disclosure of its history, and all its component parts to the world, not wishing to incur the responsibility of confiding to himself, for the sake of profit, a secret which was calculated to do such universal good. And such has been the wonderful result of its operations, that the London Lancet, Medical Times, and the most eminent physicians of both hemispheres, are anxiously calling upon sufferers to have immediate recourse to it, and proclaiming that of all known medicines, it alone has positively established its efficacy by undeniable proofs of curing consumption and all other diseases of the lungs.
