A Chapter about Trees. Under the above heading a correspondent of the Massachusetts Ploughman furnishes the following sensible article: As upon other rural matters, so upon this, a great deal has been written and a great deal more remains which may be written. The culture of trees has its own times, modes of operating subjects to be acted upon, and results to be obtained.

1. THE TIME.—All hardy Trees, fruit or ornamental, may be successfully transplanted at any season in the year, when the three following circumstances concur, namely: the Tree in a dormant state, the ground free from frost and excessive moisture, the weather above freezing temperature.

Trees of the evergreen tribes, however, become so completely dormant, or in a state of repose, for two or three weeks about the time of the summer solstice, that they are often successfully transplanted at that season.

The very best combination of circumstances is that of the tree perfectly dormant, the ground warm and tractable, the weather mild and cloudy, with a prospect of rain. When a week of rainy weather immediately follows the planting of a tree success is almost certain to ensue.

2d. THE CITE OF A TREE.-As in building a house, so in planting a tree, a foundation must be laid for it. For all kinds of trees, deep tillage is the first thing, and the second thing, and the third thing, and all of these things combined.

For a tree five to ten or twelve feet high, dig a hole one and a half to two and a half feet deep; four feet in diameter will barely answer, but six or eight feet is a great deal better. If the ground in the bottom of the hole is hard, loosen it with a pickaxe, five or more inches deeper, then fill it up with the soil, a little of the subsoil and rich well rotten compost manure, intimately mixing the three together.

3d. PREPARING THE TREE.—Pare the broken ends of the roots smoothly, always entering the knife upon the under side, and cutting with an upward slant. Shorten in top also, if the root is weak so that there may be a balance of power between root and branch.

4th. PLANTING THE TREE.—The tree should stand at the same depth in the ground that it grew previously to its removal. Deep planting, as an Irish gardener expresses it is murder entirely.

Let one man hold the tree, and another get on his knees and work with his fingers among the roots, straightening them out and filling up all the hollow places among them with generous rich soil, until the hole is completely full. Then press the ground, gently but firmly around the tree with the foot, and the work is done. If the soil is very dry, two or three buckets of water may be slowly poured into the hole just as soon as the roots are well covered, and before the hole is completely filled. Generally, however, this is unnecessary, except perhaps for evergreen trees. 5th. AFTER TREATMENT.-It is an ex. per ?"

the first season after planting them. This got a little the best set of teeth you ever is nothing more than covering the ground, did see," said the green 'un, grinning, for three or four feet around them, with a depth of two or three inches of straw, leaves, seaweed, or the like, carefully placing stones or sods upon the top so that turn upon him, the mulching may not be blown away .-Trees in any way exposed to the wind ought to be staked and tied the first season if no longer.

of practice worth almost as much

Still further, all kinds of fruit trees, and generally all cultivated trees, require more you would like the business, sir?" or less care and attention as long as they live; and like domestic animals, they become miserable and worthless by neglect. It is, therefore, of little use to plant trees unless one means to take care of them.

A tree that has been set some years, and is not in a thrifty condition may be greatly benefitted by digging a circular ditch around it about two feet wide and two feet deep, and at a distance of about as many feet from the tree as the latter is inches in diameter. The roots should all be cut off smoothly, even with the inner side of the ditch, which should then be filled up with good rich soil, intermixed with well rotted compost manure, ashes, charcoal dust, or old broken bones. Old trees thus treated often renew their youth. and show their gratitude, for years to come, in the substantial form of bushels of lucious fruit, always excepting the peach and nectarine, which should never, in this climate, be suffered to stand longer than eight or ten years from the seed. A few peach trees should be set every year to keep up a supply of this delicious fruit.

To CLEAN PAPERED WALLS .- The very best method is to rub them with stale bread. Cut the crust off very thick, and wipe straight down from the top, then go to the top again, and so on. The staler grow very fast and to add to the machines the bread the better.

BALDNESS PREVENTED .- Take 4 ounces the rag breakers, shaking the whole buildof castor oil, 8 do. good Jamaica rum, ing from another apartment. 30 drops oil of lavender, or 10 do. oil of rose, annoint occasionally the head, shaking well the bottle previously.

strong vinegar, a pint of lard, a gill of table salt, and one ounce of copperas. dissolve in a skillet over a fire, and then drench your horse with the mixture. These remedies have been adopted in Indiana and Kentucky, and have proved to be a perfect cure.

Cow SHEDS .- If you have not already provided your cattle with cow sheds, do so without farther delay-humanity to the beasts, as well as interest to yourself, call out for their erection .- American Farmer.

OFTEN breaking up a surface keeps a soil in health-for when it lies in a hardbound state enriching showers run off. and the salubrious air cannot enter.

MY GARDEN GATE. Stand back, bewildering politics, I've placed my fences round; Pass on, with all your party tricks, Nor tread my boly ground. Stand back-I'm weary of your talk, Your squabbles, and your prate; You cannot enter in this walk,

Stand back, ye thoughts of trade and pelf I have a refuge here; I wish to commune with myself; My mind is out of gear. These bowers are sacred to the page Of philosophic lore:

I've closed my garden gate.

Within these bounds no envies rage; I've shut my garden door. Stand back, Frivolty and Show,

It is a day of spring; I want to see my roses blow, And hear the blackbird sing; I wish to prune my apple-trees, And make my peaches straight-Keep to the causeway, if you please; I've shut my garden gate.

I have no room for such as you, My house is somewhat small, Let love come here, and friendship true, I'll give them welcome all; They will not scorn my household stuff, Or criticise my store,

Pass on-the world is wide enough : I've shut my garden door. Stand back, ye pomps, and let me wear

The liberty I feel,

I have a coat at elbows bare ; I love its dishabille. Within these precints let me rove, With nature free from state: There is no tinsel in the grove; I've shut my garden gate.

What boots continual glare and strife? I cannot always climb; I would not struggle all my life-I need a breathing time. Pass on-I've sanctified these grounds To friendship, love and lore; You cannot come within these bounds,

From the N. Y. Spirit of the Times.

I've shut my garden door.

The Patent Rag Chewer. In a village not a hundred miles from this place, there is established a papermill. which attracts no small share of attention from the curious, and elicits many a visit. as all are of course anxious to see the process of converting old rags into paper. It sometimes happens that those crowds of admirers of the marvellous, contain among their numbers some of those real matter of that kind of fellows who like something of cause as well as effect, which may be illustrated by the following dialogue :-

"I say, stranger, how do you get 'em ere rags fine enough to make paper ?" "We have men employed to chew them, sir," replied the paper man. " To what! to chew them did you say?"

"Yes, to chew them to be sure-did you never hear of chewing rags to make pa-

"I see, I see," replied he of the paper mill, stepping back; "I never saw a better set of teeth for business. Well we give experienced hands $1 50 per day, and the new beginners we give $1-do you think "Yes sir-ree, and the wages too!" replied the other with delight. " Very well, sir, you may set in now for a month, and at the expiration of that no doubt I will raise your wages. Here you may commence on this"-handing a saddle blanket to his much delighted applicant who took it, and set down to his task with as much sang froid as an epicure to a well roasted piece of beef. "I say, old pard, do you think that 'ar blanket will stand me any of my time at all? Why, I could chew it all to smash up and swallow it before you could tell me what time the sun sets by Elton's Al-

He set to work like a juvenile steam engine, his heavy teeth grinding as if they were mill stones, the dust flying, but desperately intent on earning good living wages, though the labor was exceedingly bad living. With the velocity of a Bengal tiger, and spirit worthy of a better cause, the martyr of the progress of science continued his task, wondering beyond expression, in his own mind how many hands, or rather how many setts of teeth, it took to do the chewing for that "tarnation big mill." But it was in vain that the heavy jaws wagged, and the sharp teeth crushed, the pile of chewed rags did not seem to feelings of rising indignation, a crowd began to gather around to witness the sin-GROWTH OF HAIR INCREASED, AND gular spectacle of a human opposition to

-why don't you go up and see them?" The crowd looked very much delighted and expressed themselves very highly pleased with his performance. "I know I can't go it like them fellows up stairs, for my grinders ain't used to it yet, besides I don't believe horse blankets is good to start on, but I tell you stranger, when it comes to vittels or to baken, I am thar." The fun began to rise, and with it the rag chewers indignation. "See here, stranger," he bellowed, spitting out his last attempt, and hallowed to his employer, who had just appeared—"blamed to only apprised of his mistake by the fist of blamed nation, if I'm goin' to sit here to the husband." be laughed at in this ere way-if you don't put me up stairs among the rest of 'em, I won't chew up another blanket, ed for the season, lay it carefully aside, darned if I do!"

"What!" exclaimed the employer with a sober face, and very indignantly, " is that all you've got chewed up? And wet, too, why man! Get out of this-you'll never do for this business in the world .-There's a blanket ruined to all eternity, too, for you've wet every mouthful, and how can we make dry paper out of wet rags? Come, move yourself in a hurry."

The victim did not wait a second invition, but went off in all speed, for fear he should be called upon to pay for ti Slanket, fully determined hereafter to stick to his lawful business, and let 'darned' paper mills alone.

Love in a Hogshead.

An English traveller, after describing the fete given at Paris, in honor of the last peace with Great Britain, concludes with the following anecdote:

"A lusty Frenchman, who from his head dress, a la Titus I shall distinguish by that name-escorting a lady, whom, on ac-count of her beautiful hair, I shall style Berenice-stood on one of the hindmost benches. The belle, habited in a tunic a la Grecque, with a species of sandal which displayed the elegant form of her leg, was unfortunately not of stature sufficiently commanding to see over the people's heads. It was to no purpose that the gentleman called out "a bas les chapeaux," when the hats were off, the lady still saw no better.

"What will not gallantry suggest to a man of fashionable education? Our considerate youth perceived at no great distance, some persons elevated on a plank, supported by a couple of casks. Confiding the lovely Berenice to my care, he vanished-but almost in an instant he reappeared, followed by two men bearing an empty hogshead, which it seems he procured from the tavern at the west entrance of the Tuilleries.

"To place the cask near the feet of the lady, pay for it, and fix her on it, was the business of a moment.

"Here then she was, like a statute on its pedestal, enjoying the double gratification of seeing and being seen. But, for enjoyment to be complete, we must share it with those we love. On examining the space where she stood, the lady saw there was room for two, and accordingly invited the gentleman to place himself beside her. In vain he resisted her entreaties; in vain he feared to incommode her. She commanded; he could not de less than obey. Stepping up on the bench, he thence with characteristic agility, sprang upon the cask.

"But oh! fatal catastrophe! while by the light of neighporing clusters of lamps, every one was admiring the mutual attention of this sympathising pair, in went the head of the hogshead! Our till then envied couple fell suddenly up to the middle of the leg in wine lees left in the cask, by which they were bespattered up to their very eyes. Nor was this all; being too eager to extricate themselves they over set the cask, and came to ground rolling in it and its offensive contents.

"It would be no easy matter to pic-

> AN APT REPLY.-We were amused, a few days since, while sitting in a crowd, in a village not many miles from this, to hear the following dialogue, which took place between M. D. and a negro, who, but a short time previous, had the misfortune to be one of the doctor's patients. It seems that the darkey was one of the several patients in the same family, and among the first of the sick to recover.

The negro passing by discovered the doctor in the crowd where we were sitting, and thus saluted him-(at the same time placing his wool-beaver carefully un-

BROTHERLY LOVE .- 'Jack, Jack ?' cried a sailor, on board a ship at sea, to one of his companions.

'Hallo!' replies Jack; 'what is it?' 'Your brother's overboard!'

'Overboard!' 'Yes!'

Blast the luck! he's got my sca boots and monkey-jacket on!'

The medical faculty constitutes an anomaly in this or any other country—all of them are able lecturers and the best of teachers.
