

"Equality or Independence," has been her watchword; no thinking man can deny that the former is lost to her, and is forever unobtainable, in this Confederacy; and if her courage equals her sensibility to insult and injury, she cannot decline to strike early and resolutely for the latter.

For one, I would vote for secession; and with the concurrence of a respectable majority of her people, for unequalled secession.

Very Respectfully,
M. C. M. HAMMOND.

FOR THE ADVERTISER.
Mr. Editor:—By the kindness of some of my friends, my name has been placed in your paper, as a suitable person to represent the District in the State Convention. I am much obliged to my friends for this mark of their kindness, but must say in all candour, that I feel that it is a position that I am not qualified to occupy. Should, however, the people of Edgefield District see fit to elect me, I shall not shrink from the discharge of my duty, and shall endeavor to do what I conceive to be right, fearlessly and independently.

In regard to what course the State should adopt at this time, I will simply present my humble views:—I think that South Carolina should use every honorable means in her power, to enlist the co-operation of the other Southern States, in forming a Southern Confederacy, but should she fail in getting their co-operation, after using all honorable measures to do so, I think she should then take the matter in her own hands; and if in her wisdom, she thought it best to secede, I should go for such a measure, be the consequences what they may.

Respectfully,
Z. W. CARWILE.

FOR THE ADVERTISER.
Mr. Editor:—In answer to the call for their sentiments upon those whose names are before the public for seats in the Convention, I will answer briefly: That I think secession should be effected by co-operation with one or more of the slave States. If that cannot be obtained, South Carolina should, in the last resort, secede alone. It is her indisputable right, and the first act of aggression if any should follow it, must be committed by the U. S. Government. Such act of aggression should bring every slave State to our aid; but should it not, we should rather meet the consequences of asserting this right, than leave it to be done by our children, in a far worse condition than ourselves for such an issue.

M. L. BONHAM.

FOR THE ADVERTISER.
Mr. Editor:—As my name, through the kindness of friends, has been announced in your columns for a seat in the Convention, I deem it a duty I owe to them and the people of the District, thus formally to declare, that I do not wish to be considered a candidate for the position.

I make this formal declaration of my purpose, that I may return my sincere thanks to those of my friends, to whose partiality I am indebted for the announcement; and at the same time to relieve myself from the awkward position of seeming to occupy an equivocal position before the people of the District.

However willing, I may be, at all times to serve my District, in this or any other office, it may come to place me, yet, I am unwilling to embarrass the people in their choice, by allowing my name to be used for so high and responsible an office, without some more decided manifestation of public sentiment, than the kindness and partiality of a few of my friends.

Very respectfully,
LEROY H. MUNDY.

FOR THE ADVERTISER.
Mr. Editor:—The unusual calm in the public mind in regard to the great duties, that lie before us, has forced upon me the question, is Edgefield District about to occupy the position of the Rip Van Winkle of South Carolina? Is she to manifest apathy and indifference to the momentous events, that are in the progress of development, in which her citizens have so deep a stake, and in which her sons are destined to take an active part? I trust not. I believe her apparent unconcern, results from the unamity of her people upon the grand issues before them, and from the fact that her decision has already been calmly and fearlessly made. With her argument has been exhausted, and she is now waiting in the attitude of one ready for action. It will be found to be the calm that precedes the whirlwind, if oppression and wrong do not stay their hands, and retrace their steps. However unanimous her people may be, and however nerved for the hour of resistance, there yet remain certain duties, that call for matured consideration, as necessary to the wise and judicious discharge of them; and which I fear will devolve upon them before they are prepared, unless they shake off their present apathy, and come with stout hearts and willing minds, without delay, to the task before them. The period for the election of Delegates to a Southern Congress, and of those to a State Convention is not now four weeks off, and I have not heard a suggestion upon the subject from any public meeting, or in the Newspaper of the District—not a name has been yet suggested for either office. It is certainly true, that the public mind should be directed to the subject, so that by reflection and consultation among the voters, a safe selection of candidates may be made in every way qualified, to participate in the deliberations of those grave and responsible political bodies. I regard the present, as the most momentous period in the history of this country since the revolution of 1776, and connected with the most eventful issues, that were ever submitted to the deliberation of a political assembly. The future destiny of South Carolina, and the slaveholding States are indissolubly connected with the course of measures, which may be adopted by either of those political bodies, and hence the wisdom and duty of selecting good and true men to represent us, men known to the District, as of tried patriotism and firmness, and particularly identified with us by the sacred ties of family, and fire-side altars, by their property, home and the obligations which those relations impose. I feel that we have approached a point in the progress of political changes and innovations, where it will be impossible to stop the onward tendency of events. The portents furnished by the measures of the abolitionists of the Northern States, and the rights of Congress, which is made subservient to Northern fanaticism, admonish me that great political changes are at hand, and if the Southern people have spirit and firmness enough to defend their highest birth-right, nay, if they still retain the instincts of self-preservation, they must prepare to put their misdeeds in order, not to die, but to live. A mischievous agent has been evoked into being, that no man in any age can stay. False notions of religion, prejudice and fanaticism, united to the unholy lust of political domination, have united together to destroy our dearest interests, if not to accomplish in the end, our total destruction. Nothing can save us but wisdom, firmness, union and love of country. That love of country, which our insidious, can sacrifice self, for the salvation of our State.—The agitators of the slave question among the Northern people, and particularly in the halls of Congress, is fraught with more peril to us than all other causes. It is the great source of spreading the poison of fanaticism, the potent engine of distracting and alarming our people at home. We can resist an open enemy and put him in defiance, but who can provide against the dark plots of a heartless enemy, or the machinations of the midnight assassin. Treason may plot and stab, and yet the arm remain concealed. If agitation is suffered to stir up the public mind, and to fan the flame by appeals to prejudice and fanaticism at popular assemblies, and through the public prints, it will not be ten years, before every slaveholder in the Southern States, will feel unsafe at his own fire-side. Agitation will act like a moral pestilence, prevailing the land, and producing abundance and disease in every quarter, and whoever it shall have destroyed the moral tone of our people and impaired their physical energies by its poisonous influence, it will take its onward course, and consummate its fiendish purpose of desolating our land. It must be stayed or our destiny is fixed, and our destruction certain. The question now arises, can it be stopped? Is there any human power, capable of staying its progress, or of evading its desolating consequences? There is a remedy against this growing evil, if taken in time, and it is the only remedy, adequate to save the South and its institutions. The remedy lies in the separation of this Union, and the establishment of a Southern Republic. If there be any truth in history, and if its pages furnish any lessons of wisdom in regard to the nature and character of man, from the fall to the present day, they admonish us that the only remedy, is to be found in a separation of these States. All other measures will prove but temporary palliatives and expedients, and instead of acting as a remedy, will in the end, only tend to aggravate the evil. Fanaticism and the lust for power when combined, have never been known to be stayed by the chains of reason, duty or conscience, but they march with increased zeal at every success to the accomplishment of this end, even if their course should be marked by ruin and desolation. I can see no ray of hope, no ground of safety short of secession. Peter, the Hermit was not under the influence of a more maddening and ferocious zeal to free the holy land from the sacrilegious possession of the infidels, than the abolitionists are to liberate our slaves. If the South want in supineness, until they have acquired power, we shall find thousands even among those who now minister in holy things, preaching a crusade against us, whose whole object will be the mutilation of our property, and our social degradation and misery. An army of fanatics and levellers, of Agrarians and Socialists, Fourierites and Fanny Wrights, men led astray by the frenzy of a mistaken zeal, or by the "harrow workings of corrupted hearts," who openly assert that the Bible lies if it tolerates slavery, will march from the North for our subjugation, and even should they ultimately fail, they will nevertheless desolate a portion of this peaceful land with fire and sword, unless we prepare for that day of bitterness. In separation lies our only path of safety. It may be achieved by a peaceful and amicable, but let it be remembered that off in the nettle danger, the flower, safety is alone to be found. Let us, ghid on our armour, prepared to execute, without honor and patriotism shall enjoy. Whenever we shall stand to the North in the attitude of an independent power and occupy to her, the same relation that the present General Government does to Canada, England or France, I shall feel safe in the possession of our rights, and in the enjoyment of our social institutions. I would much sooner trust to treaty stipulations than to constitutional compacts, that have no longer any binding obligations upon our posterity.

There have been a conservative in politics, throughout a life of no short duration. The very instincts of my nature, fostered by education and the habit of opinion and thought, have attached me to the institutions of my country, both state and federal. I was taught to venerate the great men who framed our present system of government. I have habitually looked to the union of the States under the constitution, as the great bulwark of civil liberty, the last hope for freedom. I need not therefore, say to you, that the struggles in my mind have been painful and full of sorrow in the necessity, which has been forced upon me to change this opinion, and to adopt my present convictions. My affections were given to a substance, that had life and beauty; they are now claimed for a shadow that has neither light nor heat. I have no worship for such a divinity, and I must acquiesce in the necessity that forces upon me the decision of a new object of devotion. The time and the mode constitute subjects for future consideration, which must be made to depend upon future developments. The State is not ready for this important step yet, and to act alone will be attended with inconceivable hazard and possibly may end in disastrous failure.
