

Poetry.

I OWE NO MAN A DOLLAR.

Oh do not envy, my own dear wife! The wealth of our next door neighbor, But bid me still be stout of heart,

Our neighbor you saw in his coach to-day, With his wife and his flaunting daughter, While we sat down at our coverless board

This neighbor, whose show has dazzled your eyes, In fact, is a wretched debtor; I pity him from my very heart,

Why the man is the veriest slave alive, For his dashing wife and daughter Will live in style though ruin should come—

But he feels it the tighter every day, That terrible debtor's collar! Oh! what would he give could he say with us,

You seem amazed, but I'll tell you more: Within two hours I met him Sneaking away with a frightened air,

And he held my hand as I proudly said, "Now, I owe no man a dollar!"

Ah! now you smile, for you feel the force Of the truth I have been repeating; I knew that a downright honest heart

To-morrow I'll rise, with a giant's strength, To follow my daily labor; But ere we sleep let us humbly pray

For our wretched next door neighbor: And we'll pray for the time when all shall be free From the weight of the debtor's collar—

When the poorest will lift his voice and cry, "Now, I owe no man a dollar!"

GRIEVE NOT THY FATHER AS LONG AS HE LIVETH.

Ah! grieve him not, whose silver hairs Thin o'er his wasted temples stray; Grieve not thy sire, when time impairs

His tottering steps with reverence aid,— Bind his bow with honor's wreath And let his defunct ear be made

The harp where filial love shall breathe. What though his pausing mind partake The evils of its house of clay,—

Though wearied, blinded memory break The casket where her treasures lay. Still with prompt arm his burdens bear, Bring heavenly balms his wounds to heal, And with affection's watchful care, The error that thou mark'st, conceal.

Know'st thou how oft these powerful arms Have clasped thee to his shielding breast,

When infant weak, or childish harms, Thy weak, unguarded soul distressed? Know'st thou how oft these accents strove Thine unimpaired mind to aid? How of a parent's prayer of love, Hath pierced dense midnight's darkest shade?

Grieve not thy father, till he die, Lest when he sleeps in earth's cold breast, stables, granaries and out buildings properly located and conveniently constructed. Are the stalls and troughs for our horses so constructed as to be comfortable, and to prevent waste of food?

Do we chop fodder, corn or meal? Do we vary the food, or continue the same? Do we make thorough use of the carry-comb morning and night?

Do we have good collars and traces for our horses, or do we use grape vines and hickory whips? Have we good plows, harrows, hoes and every kind of implement necessary to facilitate and save labor, and do we suffer these to lie out in night dews and rains, or have we a place for each one beneath a shelter, and do we take care that each is stored in its place when not in use?

Do we, as a matter of grace feed our cows on decaying cabbage leaves, and expect to have butter fit to be used? These are but few of the many questions that farmers might ask themselves with profit, but I will forbear pressing more upon the mind of the reader lest he fail to heed any of them.

This is a great mistake, and never shall we be a thrifty, independent, good-living people, until we change our habits in this respect. The trifling occurrences of every day life make up the sum of human happiness or misery, so do the details of planting and farming constitute the gain or loss.

These are but few of the many questions that farmers might ask themselves with profit, but I will forbear pressing more upon the mind of the reader lest he fail to heed any of them. It is a very general fault among the best of managers that small things are passed by as too insignificant to deserve attention.

Rules for the Application of Manure. The following article, from the writings of Von Thier, is copied from the Plow, the Loom and the Anvil.

We much question whether one farmer out of a hundred ever entered into any calculation to inform himself about the weight or given measure of manure; yet how without such calculations, can he tell whether his cattle are over or under loaded, or his land over or under dugged?

Is there any business on this earth conducted with so little pretence to exactness, as that of agriculture? But how can it be otherwise, when there is for it no pretence of education, or systematic account of any thing—when, in fact, the idea is that any fool may make a farmer.

The real value of manure is increased by the fact that it progressively augments itself, and that, beside the produce it yields, an extra quantity of manure will if properly bestowed never fail to produce the elements of a fresh supply, so that it will soon be possible to cultivate those plants from which the largest sum of money may be realized.

On the other hand, the manure diminishes in like proportion, if scarcity is allowed to be felt, and an immediate and suitable remedy be found and applied. One of the consequences of a scarcity or diminution of manure is a scarcity of straw, and where there is little straw or fodder little dung can be obtained; and thus the quantity of manure progressively dwindles away until the soil becomes totally exhausted.

However, expensive it may be to bestow the first quantity of manure on a soil which has been impoverished, there certainly is no capital better employed than that which is expended in this manner.

The usual load for a wagon drawn by four horses is thirty-six cubic feet of stable manure half reduced, and in the state, that is to say, when the straw has become soft and disorganized, without being wholly decomposed and the dung is moist, yet not very watery a cubic foot of it will weigh 26 pounds; therefore a load 36 feet contains 2016 pounds, which for the sake of obtaining round numbers we will reduce to 2000 pounds. Where the roads are good and the weather favorable, this load may be increased; but as a period of fine weather is seldom used for carrying manure, this quantity will in general be found to be tolerably correct.

If the straw is not decomposed or altered, a cubic foot, closely packed, will not weigh more than 18 pounds, and in this case the volume or size of the load is increased, and contains from 45 to 46 cubic feet of manure.

When eight of these loads are distributed over an acre of land it is considered that a good covering has been given. Each square perch then receives 88 lbs. of manure, and each square foot nearly 6 pounds. If only five of these loads be allowed each acre, as is generally the case, it is said then that ground has been slightly manured and each square perch receives about 54 pounds. And lastly, if 12 loads are spread over each acre, which must never occur where cereal crop are to be grown, (we of course do not include Indian corn,) unless the land has been completely exhausted, then the ground is said to have received an abundant manuring.

It is customary to allow only one-half the weight and quantity of manure above mentioned when the manure is derived entirely from sheep because the effects which it produces are at once greater and more prompt but less efficacious in point of durability.

The periods of these manurings occur every three, four, six or nine years. The more frequently applied, the slighter they are; and the longer the intervals the more abundant must the manuring be. Thus it is necessary to take into account not only the quantity to be laid on at each time but the number of times to be repeated.

RECIPE FOR MAKING APPLE PUDDING.—Pare and chop fine half a dozen more of the best cooking apples—rub a little grease on the inside of a pudding dish, and cover the bottom and sides with half an inch of finely pulverized bread, and some butter divided into small lumps; then put on a layer of apples with sugar and grated nutmeg, and repeat the layer, which must be of bread and butter, and pour on gradually over the whole, a cup of cold water. Bake for thirty minutes. It may, when desirable, be prepared and baked the day before it is used, but it must be turned into a platter thoroughly heated before serving, and sprinkled with powdered sugar. No sauce required.

CUSTARD WITHOUT EGGS.—One quart of sweet new milk; four table-spoonfuls of flour, and two of sugar. Season with nutmeg, or cinnamon if you prefer it, and salt to your taste. The milk should be put over a brisk fire, and when boiling the flour must be stirred in, after having been mixed with cold milk—to prevent its lumping. As soon as thoroughly scalded add the sugar, salt and spice. It may be baked either in crust or cups. This is a fine custard, and by many preferred to that made with eggs.

Wit and Humor.

A GOOD REASON.—A country pedagogue had two pupils, to one of whom he was very partial, and to the other very severe. One morning it happened that these two were late and were called out to account for it. "You must have heard the bell, boys; why did you not come?" "Please sir," said the favorite, "I was a dreamin' that I was goin' to California, and I thought the school-bell was the steam-bell as I was goin' in."

"Very well, sir," said the master, glad of any pretext to excuse his favorite; "and now, sir, (turning to the other) what have you to say?" "Please sir, please sir," said the puzzled boy—"I! I was waitin' to see Tom off!" It was this same boy who being asked the next day if his father was a Christian, answered, "No sir, he's a Dutchman."—Carpet Bag.

SWEET.—"Ma! ma! Cousin Bill, he's in the parlor, with sister Saul, and he keeps biting her." "Cousin Bill biting Saul!" "Yes'em, I seed him do it ever so many times; bit her right on the mouth—and the tarmal gal didn't holler a bit nother."

"Oh—ah! I never mind Ned, I guess he didn't hurt her much." "Hurt her! by gosh, she loves, it she does, oos she kept letting him, and didn't say nothing but just smacked her lips as though twas good she did. I seed it all, through the key-hole. I'll fire taters at him, by gosh."

A flashy young man went into a Posy country clothing store the other day, and asked the price of a pair of pants. When he told the price he exclaimed—"Why no, you don't say; I could get 'em cheaper than that."

"No doubt," replied the merchant. "I've lost three pair since your arrival." "Ah, indeed! You have lost something else too, which some would miss more than their breeches."

"Is it possible! Pray what else have I lost?" "Your brains," coolly responded the other.

"Oh, I knew that," retorted the merchant. "But I would not accuse you for a moment of having stolen them."

BUT.—Some people always have a but, which they put in the way of everything. Inquiring of such a one the character of his neighbor, he replied: "Why, he is a poorly fair, clever sort of man; but hem."

"What?" "Why, a hem—why he feeds his darned old horse on pumpkins!"

HOW DELIGHTFUL, when one reposing after the fatigues of the day, and the mind, before entering dream-land, is perchance taking a retrospective sweep of years gone by, calling up fond images in the memory until the glowing sunlight of other days seems returning back again how pleasant then is it to feel the gripe of a bedbug in the back.

"POPEYE," said one darkie to another, "what am a crowner's quest?" "Wal de fac is, nigger, a crowner's quest am a lot of cellars what sits down on a dead man, to find out for sartin whether he am dead, or only playing possum!"

Mrs. GUMMY says she don't know what they want of a grand jury. She thinks that common juries are grand enough, as her husband felt so grand when he was on the jury that nobody dared to speak to him for a month afterward.

POOR PIGS!—The farmer whose pigs were so lean that it took two of them to make a shadow, has been beat by another, who had several so thin that they would crawl out through the cracks in their pen. He finally stopped them by tying knots in their tails!

"LANDBLOR," said an exquisite, "can you enable me from your culinary stores to realize the pleasure of a few ducats murphies, rendered innocuous by igneous martyrdom?" He wanted a sweet potato baked. Highfalutin that, was't it?"

An editor down South, who served four days on a jury, says he's so full of the law, that it is hard to keep from cheating somebody.

"TERRIBLE pressure in the money market," as the mouse said to the keg of specie when it rolled over him.

Agricultural.

Farming—Attention to Small Things—the Secret of Success.

Messrs. Editors:—If you will allow me the use of a brief space in the columns of the Farmer and Planter, I will make a few hints upon matters relating to farming.

I fully believe that too much cannot be said in favor of subsoiling our lands and protecting them against the washing rains, that bear so rudely away from the soil the elements essential to its productiveness. These matters, together with rotation of crops, and drainage of the wet lands, are receiving, I am glad to see, due consideration at your hands. The ravages occasioned by their neglect throughout the South are too apparent to be mistaken, and all except the voluntary benighted and those into whose mind no light can shine, are now convinced of what ought to be done to render their land productive and their homes permanent. But there are other things to be attended to besides these fundamental principles of successful farming are many trifles, so considered, that make the profit or loss of the husbandman, and in the observance of these lies the good management of the farmer, or in their neglect the secret of his failure. In the first place, it is a matter of moment for most of us who cultivate diversified crops to ask ourselves, if we have our
