

From the Wisconsin Farmer.
IMPORTANT DISCOVERY
Mr. Editor:—I am suggested in Chemistry that paints for common use might be greatly improved in durability, and cheapness in cost, and I commenced a series of chemical experiments with a view of accomplishing these ends, which have been prosecuted at various intervals, up to last March, when I became fully convinced that should, at no very distant day, succeed in my experiments.

At that time I turned my attention to Agriculture; purchased a large farm, and commenced improving it; and as I expected to have considerable use for paints upon my own premises, I renewed my efforts to perfect my discoveries, and after a labor of nearly 500 experiments, testing my preparations, and subjecting them to rain, heat, alkalis, and every other agent to which paints could reasonably be exposed, I have at last succeeded in producing paints from materials known and common in every community, which are admitted by good judges, to be superior in all the essential qualities which constitute good paints, at least for outside painting, to those now in general use.

My discovery, consists mainly in the use of another fluid (a compound) as a substitute for linseed oil, and other solids as a base, in the use of a soft lead, and substituting cheap, single varnishes in the place of those expensive ones now in use.

I use, therefore, no linseed oil, none of the common varnishes, and no white lead, except in producing a "pure white," and a few of the finer tints closely allied to that color, which constitute but a mere fraction of the paints in general use.

The superiority of these paints are as follows, viz: They adhere better; dry quicker, without "driping"; are less affected by the weather; they dispense almost wholly with the use of white lead, a most deleterious substance to health; are much simpler in preparation and cost much less than those now in use.

All the darker colors, such as the various shades of brown, red, and ochre and orange, together with fawn, slate, chocolate, straw color, &c., which are becoming so fashionable for all outside painting, can be produced at a cost for materials, of about one-third the usual expense of common paints, and the brighter colors, such as green, blue, red, yellow, &c., at an expense of a trifle more than one-half the usual expense.

In connection with these paints, I have succeeded in producing two varnishes, one approximating to a light wine color, for varnishing the darker colors, and one transparent, for lighter colors, both at an expense of not more than one-half the price usually demanded for varnishes. Following up my experiments still further, I have produced a wash for rough fences and out houses, at a mere nominal expense, which can easily be made any color to suit the user; is hard and lasting, and can with difficulty be distinguished from real paint at a distance of a few feet.

These discoveries it is obvious, will immensely improve the painting in town and country, as soon as they become generally known; first, because they diminish the cost of materials on an average of at least one-half; and secondly, by the information which the discoverer can convey upon a printed foolscap page, every one who is so disposed, can produce his own materials, and prepare and apply his paints himself, thus saving himself one-half in cost of materials, and all the painters' bill.

These discoveries will prove of especial utility to farmers, most of whom live at a distance from any professional painter, and many of whom are well aware of the importance of protecting their buildings by paint, and would gladly do it but can ill-afford the usual outlay. While engaged in the experiments which produced these discoveries, I did not intend to do anything which I beyond my own use, but when my specimens were examined, and the cheapness of the paints known, many of the most intelligent gentlemen in this vicinity pronounced the discovery a highly important one, and in consideration of the labor and expense to which I had been subjected, recommended me to secure to myself whatever advantages might arise from them and accordingly I made application for Letters Patent, and offer the discovery to the public as one which I believe to be entirely useful and available, and a great source of economy, especially to the industrious, and those disposed to do their own work.

I propose to sell individual town, country, state, village and city rights, and as my desire is that the discovery should be placed before the public as speedily as possible, I have placed the price at what is deemed very low. It is as follows:

For one person to use upon the premises actually occupied by him, $3. Town, county, state, village, and city rights, $1 per hundred inhabitants, no town, city, or village being estimated at less than 1000 inhabitants.

These will be the prices to those who remit by letter free of charge, and obtain their patents by that means, but those who purchase of agents will be charged about one-half higher, owing to expense incurred in travelling. Persons making remittances and applications for patents, will be particular to give their full names, legibly written, with their post office, and the town, county, and state, of their residence, and those purchasing territory to the amount of $50 or more, will have specimens of paints forwarded to them by stage, or express at their own expense if they wish it, before receiving the money.

Editors of papers generally, who publish this article, or an abstract of it, containing all the important facts, and forward a copy of the print to my address, shall be entitled to a personal right. Very respectfully,
A. H. PLATT, M. D.
Practical Agriculturist.

The New York Sun rattles away in the following belittling, devil-may-care style at the prospect of what it terms a quadrangular quarrel. "Come one, come all."

REMOVALS OF WARS.—It may so turn out that we shall soon be embroiled in war again. Mexico is using bad faith in relation to the Tehuantepec route; Greece has outraged us by her treatment of Dr. King, our Consul at Athens; Austria is in a noisy way in Italy; Holstenmann returns with his narrative of supposed wrongs, and France has the quarrels of Mons. De Sartegues with John Barney to avenge.

Thus we have a quadrangular quarrel—but we are prepared to meet the consequences. Free transit over the Isthmus must be accorded; Greece must render satisfaction; Austria must put Hulsennann's discomfits in its pipe and smoke them, and France must learn to send gentlemen overboard to represent her. If our powder is to be burned, nine-tenths of our people will be ruined. We are a quarrelling nation, and unless we are quarrelling with our neighbors we are fighting among ourselves.

THE CROPS IN ANDERSON DISTRICT.—The Anderson Southern Rights Advocate says that there will be an immensely large crop of corn raised in that district if there be good seasons, and that, independent of the supply, will be larger than that of any other district. Her estimate is to be borne out, the farmers having carried into practice, this year, the lesson so often sounded in their ears "plant more corn and less cotton." Wheat, however, in some parts of the district has been affected by the fly, yet an abundant harvest is anticipated.
