THE DRY GOODS' CLERK.

BY THE PALE STUDENT.

Oh! is it not a pleasing life, To be a clerk in a dry-good store-To laugh away at care and strife, And toss new linens o'er and o'er? What matter if one's eyes are gray-What boots it if one's hair is light, Oh hath he not the maidens gay To chat to him from morn to night!

'Tis said he works from early day Until the clock strikes eight at night: That half his time is thrown away On fair ones who won't buy a mite; But why should be repine at that, As he keeps tossing cambric o'er? The ladies all are bless'd with chat, And like the clerks in a dry-good store!

The rich man may have jolly times, (Provided he is free from gout,) If he knows how to spend his dimes, And hug them when there's rogues about: The student may look wond'rous wise, And blow in crowds about his lore, But it would fill them with surprise To work awhile in a dry-good store!

Now talk no more of this or that-Of hunting after jewels rare ;-Of butcher trade that makes men fat,-Of farmers breathing country air ! They're all a false alluring sham, And will be praised, of course, the more; But there's nothing like the fancy man Who wins the girls in a dry-good store!

RUSSIA AND THE RUSSIANS. The St. Petersburg correspondent of the New York Herald thus speaks of the signs of progress and strength that meet the eye at every turn in

This city (St. Petersburg) is in itself a standing and triumphant refutation of all the pitiful and manifold misrepresentations, which have everything connected with the country.

grand and imposing magnitude which is nowhere else to be found. You are met on all sides, go where you will, with such a sameness of magnificence that particularization seems almost idle. The entire absence of wretchedness among the humblest portion of the population has to me, however, been, above and beyond all else, the highest source of gratification and astonishment. No such thing as squallid wretchedness exists. In this respect—the most really important of all-no city, at home or abroad, excepting, perhaps, Constantinople, will for a moment compare with it. For more than two months I have traversed every portion of St. Petersburg and the adjacent islands, during all hours of the day and night, and have felt no little humiliation at the reflection that despotism should have here done so much more for the toiling poor than they have ever yet accomplished for themselves. even under our own glorious institutions, which fully empower them to become their own regenerators. There is not a lane, alley, or narrow or dirty street in the whole place; and the cheerful gaiety which throngs and enlivens the gardens. prominent streets, quays and squares, though not to be compared with Paris-the world has, and never had, but one Paris-is in striking and pleasing contrast to the plodding dullness which moves through the thoroughfares of London. I was here, and in several of the other cities and towns of Northern Russia, for some time before peace was ratified, and can safely say that if the prople or business of the country had been much affected by the war, they must have been in a most gratifying condition before it commenced, and the injury produced must have become chronic, as the return of peace has brought no visible change beyond the general murmur of discontent with which its announcement was at first received. The Russians-more particularly the men who control the empire—are not enthusiasts about mere idle, fruitless glory. They care comparatively little about opinions, and attach but slight importance to anything but results. I was present when the Emperor announced the ratification of peace to the army, in front of the Winter Palace, and it seemed to fall like a wet blanket upon both the troops and the immense multitude present. The latter immediately dispersed in sullen silence.

The people, who are somewhat slow in get ting into anything, are much dissatisfied with the termination of hostilities, but the knowing ones chuckle quietly over the result. The war has only made Russia fully conscious of her own immense strength and exhaustless resources while at a remarkably cheap cost, it has unfolded to her all her imperfections and deficiencies, and these-with a wise prudence and practical good sense-she has already earnestly devoted herself to correcting. Never was the advantage which a great producing, self-sustaining country possesses in time of war over all others, made more strikingly manifest, and this difference from his house, yesterday, and died from its efwould have increased with the prolongation of the struggle. The paper portion of the currency remained throughout at par, and specie was found for some time after, when he was so near instantly obtained, as now, by presenting the notes at the bank. We are rapidly approachstand upon the same platform. But the real ismanfully in the face. We are rapidly approaching a crisis, the greatest crisis in our history or with that and their other treasures, they asin the history of free institutions. The schemes of Eur pean monarchists, begun half a century ago to undermine and destroy our republican system, are now about to be tested, to be exposed and exploded, or to break up the Union, and menced their affliction. The more they with it the last hope of republican freedom.

We are no alarmists or Union savers. We have a profound respect for the popular intellipatriotism of the masses, and on all questions where all alike have the same opportunity to inform themselves, we would not presume to enlighten or to guide others. But on the great sectional question of negro slavery, when more than half of the people are ignorant, necessarily only authorized, but imperatively impelled, to lay these facts before them. There are upwards of a hundred newspapers at the North engaged in the sole, undivided and infamous effort to debauch the instincts and reason of the people, and lead them into a crusade against the instituthe distinctions of the Almighty, degrade the twenty millions of white citizens to a hideous and eternally forbidden level with three millions of subordinate negroes.

Then there are eight hundred more that propose the same end indirectly-to limit " slavery" surround it with a cordon of "free negroism," little feet. Although we have existed seventy years on the present basis and relation of races —though we have been attended with a success hitherto unknown in history—though the twen-ty millions of white men of this republic are any other portion of their race, and though every man who thinks consecutively for five minutes cannot avoid knowing that to change these relations, and force these negroes up or ourselves down to a common level, no matter how it was done, must be and would be an utter destruction SIGNIFICANT FACT .- We deem worthy of more especial notice than was had in the proceedings of the meeting of the Kansas Association of this District, held on Saleday last, the fact that William Ellison, a colored man, and a resident of Statesburg, in this district, contributed, on that day, the sum of one hundred dollars to the funds of the association. Betokening a generous and liberal spirit, it also gave evidence of the estimation and esteem in which are held by him our sectional interests and in-stitutious, and of his readiness to defend, with his money, the common cause of the South. Ellison, once a slave, but now a slaveholder, has, entirely by his own industry, attained his present state of prosperity, and, we might say. wealth, he being the possessor of a large and productive cotton plantation.

We are pleased to see such a manifestation, from such an one, for such a cause. The example too, even from such a source, is worthy the imitation of those whose superior means and intellect render them not only more able to give, but to discern more clearly the necessity of giving, and giving liberally, to this cause .-Sumterville Watehman.
