thing, and its proper application another.

That in order to render a railroad useful to a country, it must be owned by the right sort of men, driven by the same sort of enterprise and industry which secured the owners their private fortunes. The State of South Carolina has not succeed ed in any public enterprise yet, and I think it next to an impossibility for her to manage the Blue Ridge Road if ever so well located and built, so as to compete successfully with the great and enterprising companies that have penetrated the West with their gigantic and well managed works.

We already begin to feel the inconvenience of railraond competition in drawing trade from Charleston; much of the wagon trade that used to come down from Charlotte, in North Carolina, has been diverted by the Charlotte Railroad to the North Carolina Railroad.

The trade of the great West will not be so easily turned to Charleston as some persons imagine, the matter cannot be determined by an arithmetical calculation of distance. In railroad operations, the outfit may be so much more complete, and the management so much better on one establishment than another, that it will carry commodities double the distance in the same time and for a less cost.

Recently the Graniteville company sent a hundred bales of their domestics to St. Louis, in Missouri, by the way of Nashville, Tennessee. The goods started from Graniteville, one hundred and twenty-five miles from Charleston, on the way to St. Louis. The cost of transit on these goods amounted to $640 for one hundred bales, and I doubt if they would have gone any cheaper if there had been a railroad from Nashville to St. Louis, where the goods went by steamboat. The same hundred bales of goods could have been shipped from Charleston to St. Louis by the way of New York, for $500. To the same place, by the way of New Orleans, from Charleston, insurance included, for $275. From Liverpool to St. Louis, by the way of New York, $550. From Liverpool to St. Louis, by the way of New Orleans, $300. It cost us $40 on those hundred bales of goods to Hamburg, only ten miles, on the South Carolina Railroad to Augusta; for twenty-five dollars the same has been taken from Charleston to New York: for fifty dollars I have shipped a similar quanti of goods from Charleston to New Orleans, and for $150 they can be taken from New Orleans

These facts will clearly indicate that we will have something more to do than merely build a railroad over the mountains. After it is built it will have to be worked with the greatest possi-ble skill and enterprise, or it will fail to bring the trade we anticipate.

During the first ten years of the existence of the Hamburg Railroad, Charleston, instead of advancing as was expected, actually retrogaded in popu ation.

In 1846 Charleston was connected with Knoxville by railroad-the point at which the Blue Ridge Road is to terminate. Charleston has received no perceptible advantage from that connection. Some say that the Georgia State Road uses its influence to divert trade to Savannah; and hence the necessity of tunneling mountains in order to be independent of that obstacle. The truth is, that it is Georgia and Savannah enterprise that carries the trade to Savannah; for men will send to the best markets. Some years ago the people of Nashville made a strong appeal to Charleston for aid to build a railroad from Nashville to Chattanooga, which was to put Charleston in connection with the West, and give her unheard of commerce from the Mississippi. Representations were made to public meetings, which were quite as extravagant and out of the way as some of the speeches which were made on this floor in favor of the Blue Ridge. Charleston was to receive millions, ear Gum and Block Teeth, from Blue Ridge. Charleston was to receive millions, if she got nothing more than drayage and comens: figures were set forth to show that enormous quantities of produce was to be drawn from that vast region, embracing three or four hundred miles around Nashville. The articles were separately enumerated. There was corn by the millions of bushels, wheat, barley. bacon, fard, pickled pork and beef, live stock, &c. It was quite curious to those who were entertained by those representations to witness the results. .

The city of Charleston responded to the call, and subscribed $500,000, which is now worth but $250,000. The road has been completed, now about three years, and I don't suppose that a bushel of corn has ever passed over it from Nashville to Charleston, and very few bushels of wheat, drawn in that direction by the extra-ordinary European war prices. Indeed the trade of Charleston would not be sensible of the road having been built, except by losing a vastly valuable grocery trade of all that Chattanooga country, in the valley of the Tennessee river, which trade very suddenly took the back track through the tunnelled mountains, to Nash-ville, which is supplied by New Orleans.

Charleston had a mania at one time for western extensions, and while in that mood she subscribed $250,000 to the Charleston and Memphis road. That road is destined to make another heavy draft on the Charleston trade ; it has already reached North Alabama, and entirely cut off a valuable cotton trade from Charleston, and when the road is completed, will be in connection with the valley roads, and it will be more than Blue Ridge travel and freight from taking the back track, and make the road a feeder of the Memphis and Virginia roads; that result will surely follow unless we have a direct and inde-pendent road to Charleston.

Then how necessary it is for us to take a comprehensive view of the subject and not involve the State in difficulties and embarrassments that may discourage and dampen the ardor of South Carolina, and preclude for many years to come from helping useful enterprises.

I trust, Mr. Speaker, that I have done enough in this State to satisfy the public mind that I am not what is termed in common parlance an Brevier lines or less) for the first insertion, and Fifty "old fogy," and opposed to the progress of the age.

I have always been willing to extend a helping hand to any useful and practicable work, and have not been backward in putting my own shoulder to the wheel of onward improvement. I am, however, not one of those who regard it to be so vastly important to extend railroads through the mountains of South Carolina, as to expend millions of dollars of public treasure, and involve the State in a heavy debt, to accomplish that object. For I have not the slightest idea that the profits from such a work would half pay interest on the cost, even with all the prosperity and success that the most sanguine could expect.

There can be no doubt that the State would be largely benefited by a central railroad leading from the seabord to the interior, and before I would do anything more for the Blue Ridge, I would require that company to secure a subscription bona fide, in each of the States of Georgia, North Carolina and Tennessee, which would be ample enough to secure us against embarrassment in the progress of the work; I would then require Charleston to furnish individual subscriptions and corporation aid to a sufficient amount to secure 3-5 of the capital necessary to build and equip a road from Charleston to the North Carolina line. If Charleston cannot or will not raise the means to join the State in a road which wou'd redound so much to her advantage, Beaufort may be taken hold of and be made the seabord ter minus. In either case, the project would be practical, and a paying road, and if began at the low end, every mile of it which was completed would be a renumerating property, so that a suspension like the one now likely to occur would not necessarily lead to a ruinous loss. Baltimore commenced in that way with her great work, and the Baltimore and Ohio road was a paying property nearly twenty years before the mountain cuts were made. Charleston's great object should now be to get a great central road through the State to the mountains, she has already done much towards opening new avenues South and North; she can and will do still more, and she might with great propriety make a debt of 3 or 400,000.000 A. broken before she can become the emporium of FALL AND WINTER the Wesiern trade; that is a work that Charleston will have to do, and will do at some future day, cost what it may.
