HAY MAKING IN THE SOUTH.

A Brief Essay, read before the "Beach Island Farmers' Club," at the October Meeting.

GENTLEMEN: As it is expected that each member of this Club shall make a report of some experiment, I take this opportunity to present the following, on hay making:

About the first of May, I had a ten acre lot good river-bottom land plowed up, with double plows, from 8 to 10 inches deep; the land was then well harrowed with a good two-horse iron-tooth harrow, across the plowing, and then rolled with a cast iron two-horse roller, in order to make the surface as smooth as possible. The land was soon covered with crab-grass. In consequence of the hot dry weather, I had almost despaired of realizing a crop; but after the heavy rain which fell about the 1st of September, it revived and grew off rapidly, and continued to improve until the latter part of September, when it was from two to three feet high, at which time I cut it with scythes. The plan I adopted for curing was, to have what was cut in the morning turned over and stacked up about four or five hours after it was cut, and that part of it that had from four to six hours sun on it was then put into common size shocks and remained until the next day about ten o'clock, or until the dew was entirely off, at which time they were again opened and the hay again spread, and remained so until evening, when it was put into shocks again; and remained so until the dew was off the next day, when they were opened and spread as above stated; in the afternoon, such as was sufficiently cured I had packed in the barn.

I measured one acre and obtained from that 7,675 pounds of well cured hay, which I sold for 75 cents per cwt. in Augusta; it was weighed at the city scales, and at that low price amounted to $57.56. At $1 per hundred, the amount would have been $76.75; at $1.25 per hundred $115.12. These prices are not unfrequently paid for an article in no way superior. I think there were three or four acres in the lot as good as the one I measured; the balance not more than two-thirds as good. At the rate sold, the whole lot would amount to $460; and of course still higher at increasing rates, as shown above.

I will simply call the attention of the members to the fact that if this crop had been made under favorable seasons, and if sold at the average price that Northern hay commands in Augusta, which is about $1.50, it would amount to $920, or $92 per acre.

My impression is that two crops may be taken from the same land by commencing earlier in the season, and there is no crop more profitable with the same amount of labor.

PLANTATION WORK FOR JUNE.

THE corn crop of the planting States—the importance of which, to our success in plantation economy of the country, it is impossible properly to estimate—is this month to be disposed of by what is usually termed the work of "laying by." This is always a critical period to this very valuable crop, from various causes, the most disastrous of which, however, is the work itself. Your corn, on land that has been properly prepared and judiciously worked up to this time, is growing thriftily and doing well, and is beginning to shade the land to a considerable extent. It is now proper that you stir and pulverise the surface soil, destroying all young grass and weeds, and thus "lay it by." That this last working of corn is often delayed to too late a period there is no question. There is a great diversity of opinion among planters on this subject, many preferring to work their corn even after it has commenced silking. With all proper deference to these conflicting practices, from well tested experiments, under various circumstances, we urge a more economical and profitable practice in the management of this valuable crop. We have insisted on it that the seed should not be planted until nature has clearly indicated the opening of spring. Thus secured against the contingency of serious injury from frost, your corn grows off readily and rapidly, and where it is properly cultivated, should be "layed by" early in June; at any rate before the corn begins to silk and tassel.

This work should be performed with implements that will simply pulverise the surface, destroy the young weeds and grass, avoiding by all means, the cutting or mangling the roots. Whatever may be your theory and practice in "root pruning" during the early work in your corn, withhold your pruning implements now! As the functions of every root, the stalk now has, are required to fill up and make plump the grain of corn. No truism, in plantation economy, can be better established than this, and it is therefore most clear, that all work in the form of plowing, should be withheld after the fruiting season commences. On new land peas may be sown broadcast at "laying by," they will do well and shade the ground early; it is, however, a waste of seed on old, exhausted land; they should have been planted in May, in order to have received the benefit of this last working of the corn. There can be no doubt, however, but that it is better for both your corn and peas, that they be planted on land separately. Peas are quite as injurious to your corn as would be the same amount of weeds growing among it, but we submit to the injury thus sustained by the corn, in the benefit obtained by the stock from the peas.

COTTON.—Up to this time the cotton has received comparatively little attention beyond planting. It is true, the cotton generally has been "barred and chopped out;" but this work, entirely unnecessary to the interest or prosperity of the cotton plant, with the time consumed and labor expended, might easily have been economised and saved in the important operation of planting; when, as we have shown invariably, for the last twelve years, the planting is thus performed, the cotton comes up a perfect stand, and each hill occupying the exact relative position of the bed or row that you should desire or have intended. Nor are you subject, in thus planting, to losses; first, of barring down your beds; next, the time consumed in this labor of injury, and again the impossibility of a perfect stand or any reasonable approximation to it, invariably produced by careless hands chopping after a task. It is, however, now too late to discuss this subject; the beds are now barred down and the cotton chopped out to such a stand as it may be, and the work proper in the cotton is now commencing. So soon as the corn is gotten off of hand, the work in the cotton may be prosecuted vigorously and uninterruptedly.

In the May number of this journal we have insisted upon the importance of preserving the roots unbroken in all the subsequent work in the cotton. The growth of the plant in the soil in its roots, is very much like its growth above the surface in its limbs. Indeed, this similarity of growth under the surface to that above the surface, is a very remarkable and striking feature in the cotton plant. In the cultivation of the plant, therefore, at this season of the year—middle of June—when it has commenced fruiting, the extent of the limbs is the true guide as to the proximity the sweep ever should approach the stalk, preserving your bed firm and unbroken. On this part of the subject we have but few more remarks to make.

We ask every planter and manager to bear in mind that the cotton plant is to come into bearing in the course of some twelve to fifteen days; and though it be emphatically a tap-rooted plant, with the capacity often of dipping into the earth, in one season, from four to six feet, yet it is upon its leaves and surface roots mainly that it relies for the food that it assimilates into cotton seed and lint. With this fact distinctly fixed in your mind, and the confident assurance that your land has been thoroughly prepared in the bedding and planting, the indications as to the mode of work and the implements with which it is to be performed, it would seem to be presumption in me to detain you in mentioning. There is no greater error than that which supposes cotton has but few surface roots. They are rapidly spreading into the mellow soil now, and if you do not quickly plow away from the stalks of cotton, and keep your plow away, you will industriously multiply the chances for a sorry crop. The light, flat sweep is the only instrument, and is run as much less than a half inch as possible; that will not injure the cotton after it has properly commenced bearing.

OATS.—This crop will require attention this month. Cut some for your horses and mules, say just as they begin to show a slight yellowish tinge; no feed better, when cured, than this.

HOGS.—This is a trying time with hogs usually in this country. Get them into your oats pastures as soon possible; and if you have provided for it, give them plenty of squashes, and, once a week, fail not to give them a mixture in troughs of ashes, salt, copperas and corn, filled in with water.

POTATOES.—These will yet do well from the draws. Plant of these pretty largely, as every thing on the plantation loves them and is benefitted by them, and few articles, except peas, fatten hogs faster. If you would preserve your potatoes good and free from strings, plant out a half acre in vines towards the close of this month for your seed.

THE STANDARD WEIGHT OF GRAIN.—The Board of Trade of Albany has resolved that in all its corn transactions, in the absence of any special agreement to the contrary, fifty-six, and not fifty-eight pounds, as established by the last legislature, shall constitute a bushel. This accords with the action already taken by the New York Corn Exchange.

HOW TO MEND CHINA.—From an English almanac we, a long time since, cut a receipt for mending china, and the opportunity having occurred for trying, we found it admirable, the fracture scarcely being visible after the article was repaired. It is thus made—take a very thick solution of gum arabic in water, and stir it into plaster of Paris until the mixture become a viscous paste. Apply it with a brush to the fractured edges and stick them together. In three days the article cannot again be broken in the same place. The whiteness of the cement renders it doubly valuable.—Exchange.
