Are they to seek for offices, Which men alone should station? Are they to make our country's laws,

And mix in rows, or fights ? Are they to create civil wars? Say, are these Women's rights?

No, no! a thousand noes I cry-These, are the rights of Women: A heart for home-a love for peace-With eyes that tears can swim in.

A modest mein-a silent tongue-A pleasant smile of love-A cheerful face, that's ever young-

A happy heart-contented mind-A care for household duties-A soul submissive to its God-Aye, these are woman's beauties.

DAUGHTERS. Mothers, who wish not only to discharge well their own duties in the domestic circle, but to train up their daughters at a later day to make happy and comfortable firesides for their families, should watch well, and guard well, the notions which they imbibe and with which they grow up. There will be so many persons ready to fill their young heals with false and vain fancies, and there is so much always affoat in society opposed to duty and common sense, that if mothers do not watch well, they may contract ideas very fatal to their future happiness and usefulness, and them till they grow habits of thought or feeling. A wise mother will have her eyes open, and be ready for every that any attention she ever may bestow on them is not a matter of simple duty, but of grace, or concession, or stooping, on her part? Let mothers avoid such danger. If they would do so, they must bring up their daughters from the first with the idea that in this world it is required to give as well as to receive, to minister as well as to enjoy; that every person is bound to be useful, practically, literally useful, in his own sphere, and that a woman's first sphere is the house, and its concerns and demands. Once really imbued with this belief, and taught to see how much the happiness of woman herself, as well as her family, depends on this part of her

Not so with our home mother, blessings be upon her head. The heart warm

How the little faces dimple with pleasure, and the bright eye grows still brighter, as mainma decks them with her own hands, in the new dress she has made! How much warmer and more comfortable they feel if mamma wrapthem up before they go to school! No one but she can warm the mitts and overshoes, or tie the comforters around their necks.

the precious mother. They could not sleepnay, for that matter, she could not-if she failed to visit their chamber, and with her own soft hands arrange them comfortably before they slept. Her heart thrills with gratitude to her Creator as she looks on those sweet blooming faces, and when their prayers are done, imprints a good night kiss on each rosy mouth. It may be too, a tear will start for the little nestling bird in its chill, narrow bed, for whom her maternal care is no longer needed. It sleeps though the sleet and snow descend and the wild Winter howls around its head. It needs no longer her tender care! A mightier arm enfolds i It is at rest. She feels and knows that it is right, and bends meekly to the hand that sped the shaft, and turns with a warmer love, if it be possible, to those little ones who are left to love. How tenderly she guards them from danger, and with what a strong, untiring love she watch-

Angels will look with love upon her acts. Her children will rise up and call her blessed, and the memory of her kindly deeds will enfold her as a garment.

Why not, proud lady, when the intelligent, noble-hearted, but humble mechanic—the soul of truth and honor-offered you the wealth of blushing smile you would bestow upon the elegant gentleman of leisure, who twirls a fairy-like ratan, pays you excessive compliments, and who would not soil his immaculate kids for a kingdom? Think you, because the hands are hardened with labor, and the brow bronzed by God's and noble, and the arm strong and brave to

THE LOSS OF A WIFE.

In comparison with the loss of a wife, all other bereavements are trifling. The wife! she Life and Death of Beck Cotton who busied herself so unweariedly for the precious ones around her; bitter, bitter is the tear THE DEVIL IN PETTICOATS that falls upon her cold clay. You stand beside her coffin and think of the past. It seems an amber colored pathway, where the sun shone upon beautiful flowers, or the sters glittering overhead. F in would the soul inger there. No thorns are remembered, save those your hands may unwillingly have planted. Her noble, tender heart is open to your insest signt. You think of her now "I gentiene s all be my all purity. But she is dead. The near nead that laid upon your bosom, rests in one still darkness, upon a pillow of clay; the bands that ministered are folded white and cold beneath the gloomy portal. The heart whose every beat measured an eternity of love, lies under your feet. The flowers she bent over with smiles, bend now above her in tears, shaking the dew from their petals that the verdure around her may be kept green and beautiful. There is so strange a hush in every room, no light footsten flashing around. No smile to greet you at nightfall. And the old clock ticks, and strikes and ticks-it was such music when she could hear it. Now it seems a knell on the hours through which you watched the shadows of death gathering upon her sweet face.

And every day the clock repeats that old Murder of his Wife, Matilda H. Posey, story. Many another tale it telleth 100-of beautiful words and deeds that are registered above. You feel-oh, how often-that the grave case. A few words of common, downright, respectable, practical sense, timely uttered by her may be enough to counteract some foolish idea or belief put into her daughter's head by others, whilst, if it be left unchecked, it may take such possession of the mind that it cannot later be corrected. One main talsity abroad in this age is the notion, that women, unless compelled to it by absolute poverty, are out of place when engaged in domestic affairs. Now, mothers should have a care lest their daughters get hold of this conviction as regards themselves-there is danger of it; the fashion of the day endangers it, and the care that an affectionate family take to keep a girl, during the time of her education, free from other occupations than those of her tasks or her recreations, also endangers it. It is possible that affection may err in pushing this care too far; for as education means a fitting for life, and as a woman's life is much connected with domestic and family affairs, or ought to be so, if the indulgent consideration of parents abstains from all demands upon the young pupil of the school not connected with her books or her play, will she not naturally infer that the matters with which she is never asked to concern herself are, in fact, no concern to her, and discharge of duty, and a young girl will usually be anxious to learn all that her mother is disposed to teach, and will be proud and happy to aid in any domestic occupations assigned to her, which need never be made so heavy as to interfere with the peculiar duties of her age, or its peculiar delights. If a mother wishes to see her daughter become a good, happy, and rational woman, never let her admit of contempt for domestic occupations, or even suffer them to be deemed secondary. They may be varied in
