From the Cotton Planter. CHINESE SUGAR MILLET.

Dr. CLOUD-Dear Sir :- It is almost useless now to say anything more about this plant, in land, it must, of course, be drier, in a dry time, regard to its qualities for yielding syrup and sugar, besides several other articles. It has now been fairly tried all over the South; and though it may not have come up to so great a yield of syrup as was claimed for it, still it stood its trial gloriously.

The "Sugar Millet" most unquestionably forms an epoch in the farming of the Southern possibility for every planter of making his own syrup is certainly a matter of great importance. It is truly amusing, that some persons are still so far "behind time" as to consider this plant identical with the old fashioned "Chicken Corn." Why, the mere chewing of a piece of the stalk would be sufficient to convince even "Zach. Boss" of the great difference.

But, on the other hand, its value as a forage plant ought not to be overlooked; for, as such, it is unquestionably inferior to none. Many a person will perhaps think that I am praising it too highly, but I feel confident that this plant is not yet appreciated half as much as it de-

In cutting it for syrup, a great fault is committed in cutting it before it is thoroughly ma-tured. By all means let the seed be dead-ripe before the cane is cut for the mill. By cutting it before that period, you will get a larger quantity of juice, but it will be watery, require more boiling, shrink more, and make an inferior syrup. There is no necessity for, nor advantage in stripping off the leaves, or pinching off the seed-panicles, before the seed is thoroughly ripe. This operation would only cause them to throw out suckers, which would be an injury

In boiling the juice it is of great importance to strain it well, and to have the kettle well filled. The whole mass will simmer much better than if the boiler is only hall full, and not be so apt to boil over. It should not be stirred at all, until a thick brownish crust has gathered over the whole surface, when this crust should be removed, and the liquid strained into the second boiler, and so on, until it gets its proper consistency.

The question has been made: "How to keep the canes until Fall?" In reply I would say, that there is no difficulty in it. Any barn or any shed will answer; let the canes be thoroughly matured and place them on the ground floor in a layer, say 12 to 15 inches thick. Put another layer of canes of similar thickness on the top of the first, but crossway, and so on. Cover the whole pile; the best material for it is baggasse, or refuse canes which have passed through the mill. In this way the canes will keep a very long time in excellent condition, and when taken out for grinding, it will be found that many of the watery parts have evaporated, but that the juice is much richer, and will yield a very superior article of syrup. While it will require about seven gallons of juice from fresh canes to produce a gallon of good syrup, that same quantity, and of better quality, can be made from four to five gallons of juice pressed from canes which have been preserved in this way for some weeks.

The saccharine principle will not evaporate; on the contrary, the cane seems to improve in flavor by being up in this way for some time; similar to the process which apples are under going by being kept for some time. I will now say a few words about the Sugar Millet, as a forage plant. The saving of corn is a most important matter, particularly when prices are so high, as has now been the case for several

When planted early in April, and on good, high sandy land, this millet will, by the beginning of July, have matured its canes sufficiently to serve as a substitute for corn in feeding stock. The nutritious qualities of the Sugar Canes are too well known to need any explanation. Even before the seed is perfectly ripe, the canes can be cut for this purpose. Let the whole, stalks, leaves and seed, be cut up in a common straw cutter, allowing ten or twelve good strong stalks to each working animal per twenty-four hours. Two common hands can easily, in fifteen minutes, cut up stalks enough for twenty heads, and if a few handfuls of bran are scattered over the pale of cut forage as a flavoring, so much the better. Working animals fed in this way, without any corn whatever, will not only keep in good condition, but will actually improve. Let every planter calculate for himself, how much corn he can save by feeding his stock four months on the Sugar Millet; a crop so easily raised, and which stands our droughts so well, as to deserve to be termed never-failing. Besides, the roots will sprout out again vigorously, and in a few weeks produce a second crop. Planting the seed in drills two by three feet, thirty thousand stalks are but a very fair average yield, and thus the planter can easily calculate the number of acres he may need for

The yield of seed is very different, according to the stand and the quality of the soil—say from thirty to sixty bushels to the acre, a bushel weighing from thirty-live to forty pounds. It is equally as good for feeding and fattening stock as the same weight of corn, if not more so.

There can hardly be any doubt, that the baggasse, or refuse cane from the mill, would be an excellent material for brown paper, though it has not yet been tried, as far as I know. this will be enough in favor of the Sugar Millet for this time. Augusta, Ga., Oct. 1857 ROBERT NELSON.

KEEPING SWINE .- MR. EDITOR: I saw in your paper, not long since, a query whether hogs had the rheumatism. You replied, you thought they might have it, and I thought so too. I should not think it strange if many of them had the cholera, the hip complaint, the ary, 1858, and the number of blacks who have them had the cholera, the hip complaint, the black vomit, and many other diseases, treated as they are,-shut up in a little pen about six feet square, on a plank floor, up to their knees in dirt, and no bed to lie upon.

A hog should never be kept on a plank floor. I have had them ruined by it, before I knew the cause. If they sleep on a plank floor, on straw, and that becomes wet, (often they will wet it themselves,) they will often become lame, so they will crawl with there fore feet to the trough, and will make but a small amount of pork.

A hog should have a good tight, warm pen, on some dry place of ground, with a glass win-dow that can be removed in the summer season, and a door that can be left open to admit fresh air. There should be no floor. Make it as large as you please. They need not go in the sun, it does them no good. If the pen gets dirty, just put in a cart load of manure, or chip dirt, or bog mud, (if it is dry,) and so you can clean your pen every week with a load of almost anything you can pick up.
Your hog should be showered three times a week, at least. In hot weather clean water is best. I have no opinion of soapsuds or buttermilk. A little britastone once a month is good. Follow this mothod and you will have no sick hogs. I have followed this plan for many years, even to the letter, and always give them a bed to sleep on, and let the hens roost in the pen. Edgecomb, 1857. Lincoln.

[Maine Farmer. CHARCOAL FOR SHEEP .- One of the best medicines for human beings, is finely pulverized charcoal, keep corked in a closed vial or jar, one half a teaspoonful mixed with five times its bulk of water, forming an agreeable and ex-celent remedy for almost any kind of deranged stomach and in larger doses constituting a very mild and perfectly safe laxative. There is no doubt that the same remedy would often prove of great service to domestic animals. Although we have never seen it tried, we confidently predict that half a pint to a pint powered charcoal, mixed with two to four quarts of water would prove an admirable remedy for hoven in cattle. We observed that a correspondent of a late paper has used charcoal mixed with salt for his sheep, with the best results; he had found them to suffer much on wet pastures, until he dozen; fifty dozen at $1; fifty dozen at $1,50; and made use of this remedy, after which they immediately presented a more healthful appearance.

WHY DRAIN YOUR LAND?

Will it not make the land too dry in Sum than that drainage induces drouth. The great difficulty with them is, to get moisture enough in our hot, dry Summers. It seems to them a logical conclusion that, if you take water out of than it would be if left in its natural state. But this idea is not well founded. In the matter of drainage, the Scripture idea of "giving without impoverishing" is literally fulfilled. Drainage improves the mechanical condition of the soil for furnishing water to plants, and greatly enlarges the pasture ground of the roots. Put an under-drain, three or four feet deep, States. The sugar growing section, hitherto through a piece of wet, springy land, and the not extending much north of the latitude of whole soil, for rods each side of the drain, be-New Orleans, has now been enlarged with sev- comes more loose and friable. The air is aderal degrees further towards the North. The mitted down into the soil to the point to which the stagnant water recedes. The air always carrier moisture with it, and the cooler surfaces of the particles of soil with which it comes in contact, compel it to deposit the moisture. In the driest time in Summer, a deep-drained soil will give moisture enuogh to the roots that

A deep drained soil too, is warm enough for planting much earlier in Spring than in its natural state. Crops may be put in better season, and oftentimes two crops may be taken instead of one. The roots of plants can avail Murder of his Wife, Matilda H. Posey themselves of all the richness of the subsoil, as well as of the surface. The grasses and root crops, grains and fruits grow more luxuriantly and give better results. Drainage, we are glad to know, is attracting attention among our best cultivators. Its general introduction will form a new era in our husbandry .- N. Y. Times.

----VINE CULTURE IN THE UNITED STATES .-Considerable doubt seems to exist in certain quarters as to the success of the experiments now making in various parts of the country in the manufacture of wine from native grapes. The following extract from the News, published in Vevay, Indiana, which was settled by emi-grants from the Swiss village of the same name, who were probably the first to introduce the grape culture in the West, states some of the causes of its failure:

"We have always looked upon it as a settled fact that any attempt to render general the culture of the vine would result in ruin to the party attempting it. Our seasons are too variable-one winter too cold-the next too open and warm—one summer is too dry and too hot —another is too wet. The truth is that land in the Ohio river valley is worth more money per acre to raise grass and wheat, or corn, than it is to raise grapes. We regard it as settled that any man who enters into the culture of the vine, without a capital like that of Mr. Longworth of Cincinnati, will be ruined in ten years. We are sure that the results of the chemical analysis will show that all the money Mr. L. has ever made out of the vine culture, has been done by adulterating the juice of the grape and making a little go a good way. In support of our idea, we would refer to the experience of the vine was commenced, where at an early day large amounts of money were expended in the preparation of the ground, and planting grape vines. Now, there is not a farner who has any vines who takes pains to do more than raise grapes enough for his family to eat, and to make enough to have a drink or two n the lot weather. Indeed, we may say that in the vicinity of Vevay, where the vine growing was first attempted in America, it has been abandoned and men are raising hay, wheat and corn."
