Above the plodding nations. Forget, one hour, each slavish care, And walk among the mountains; Inhale the pure and fragrant air, And drink from gushing fountains.

Your love of gold, your toil and strife, Have made your souls too bestial; Come forth again to Nature's life, And catch a glimpse celestial.

Ye warriors, fling aside your arms, And hush your battle-thunders: For smiling Peace amid her farms, Invites to rural wonders.

Ye crowds, that go like driven herds Along your streets and alleys, Come out to hear the singing birds And brooklets in the valleys.

Forsake your hot and noisy walls, And come among the roses; We'll sit beside the waterfalls Until the twilight closes.

We'll wander down the winding streams To watch the birds and fishes; Or sleep in shadows where sweet dreams Shall crown our dearest wishes.

And when the evening shadows trail Along the grassy ridges, We'll down the placid rivers sail Beneath their arching bridges. The moon shall look with raliant face Through air with odors laden,

And see us in some happy place With love and lute and maiden. Oh! then forsake the dusty street, While summer charms invite you;

Let shady forests cool the heat, And mountain air delight you.

From the American Cotton Planter and Soil. FISH PONDS.

The following excellent hints on the subject of "Fish Ponds," and their cheap and easy construction, we clip from the Southern Planter, published at Petersburg, Va. The importance of this subject, as a matter of domestic economy, adapted to the wants, convenience and capacity of every planter and planter's family in the planting States, applies with as much force here as it does in Virginia. There is scarcely a planter in this whole country who may not, at a very light outlay of labor, supply his family every day in the year with good, home-raised fresh fish. In the lime regions of Alabama and Mis-Bissippi, where there are few springs, Artesian wells supply the water for ish ponds just where fancy and convenience could desire them. What could add so much of heauty and freshness to a gentleman's home, the amusement of his children, as one of those artificial lakes of pure fresh water, and it stocked with an abundant supply of fine, fat, home-raised tame fish! All the peetry and romance of an Italian of Roman vila cloy on the imagination in thus contempliting a handsomely improved American ED.

Fra Ponds.-We desire earnestly to call the atoution of our readers, one and all, to the sub-cet of fish ponds. There is no article of food more universally not more wholesome than fresh ash. To enjoy it in all its excellence and perfection, it is indispensible that it should be cooked immediately after it is taken out of the water. Persons living remote from ponds and ivers, cannot procure supplies as promptly as is desirable. They must therefore, if they would ours. Wherever there is a ser, with very lit-bold to supply a family with cense, a pond may tle labor and no pecuniary by them bountifully be constructed that we with the nicest variety that a small pond— experience when the fourth of an acre— covering not mostly. covering not more ly a small family, if not a well stocked, will s of fish almost every day large one, with It is now customary for throughout the ner who properly appreciates almost ever luxuries of the table, to put up the comforts his annual supply of this article, ice. To se at that he should have a good and at pond for the purpose. Let him a pond supplied with a few of our ricties of perch, and in a couple of years begin to luxuriate in both of these luxuhis heart's content. We would by no eans limit the size of a fish pond to the fourth t be objectionable, as the supply of fish would of course bear a proportion to the area and depth Our mode of constructing a pond is as follows: After selecting a suitable location, taking care to avoid a very sunny exposure, both on account of the ice and the fish, we cut a ditch from three to four feet wide, according to the depth we need to go to reach the clay, cutting out all the roots carefully. When we have dug this ditch the full length of the contemplated dam, we turn about and throw the earth back into the ditch, and build the dam immediately over the ditch, with dirt altogether, taking it from the upper side, which will give more depth of water and more security against leakeage and breakage. When we have raised the dam to the requisite height, we cut a waste around each end, seven or eight feet wide, and of sufficient depth to make the dam secure from overflow in time of heavy floods of rain. If the source from whence we draw our supply of water is near, we deem it best to cut a head ditch, carrying it both sides of the pond and emptying it some distance below the dam. Care should be taken to keep far enough from the pond to prevent this ditch from becoming a drain, in case it should wash deep, that would let the water pass off from the pond. The object of this ditch is to carry off the muddy water and floods that might carry off many fish and endanger the dam. When the pond is completed, we have only to get our angling implements, go to the next poud or river, with a bucket on our arm-and while enjoying the sport of fishing, in a few hours provide a stock to start with. Or we may take a seine and a barrel, and go to work in a more business like way. In selecting fish for the pond, we prefer the varieties of perch: the freckle, or silver perch, the black perch, the wide mouth, or Joe Dentons, (as they are called amongst us,) and the yellow perch. In fact all the varieties of perch common to our waters are excellent for the table, afford fine sport to the angler, and may be caught at almost any season of the year. The chub is not suited to small ponds. He is very voracious, soon eats out the other sorts of fish, and then preys upon his own progeny. We would recom-mend to those who would like to cultivate this variety, to build a second pond for them below the first, so that they may prey upon the small fish that escape through the wastes. The common round fish of our rivers will not breed except in running water, but we like to throw a few of them in the poud to be taken out in win-ter. They grow quickly and do not prey upon the others. If our spring is a bold one, we could rear the mountain or speckled trout, with entire success, between it and the head of the pond, by sinking boxes at intervals in the stream, of two to three feet depth, and six or eight feet long, and putting a few stout rocks at the bottom. The great difficulty, however, in regard to this fish, is the distance to which we must go for them. It is very much to be regretted that our wealthy gentlemen do not pay more attention to rearing fish. In New England we are told some of our most distinguished men have regarded the subject as well worthy of their efforts.

high rent. They are rented by the acre. We know of no reason why artificial ponds may not be as productive in Virginia as in any part of Europe. Our springs furnish as pure water as any in the world, while the varieties of fish are as numerous and as fine as can be found any

As a measure of domestic economy, the rearing of fish commends itself to every farmer. As a source of healthful innocent recreation to our sons and daughters, it is worthy of our consideration. We have rarely known boys who have been taught and encouraged in the frequent and skilful use of the angle, addicted to the grog shop, the gambling halls, or any of the low haunts of vice and rowdyism. It is a refining sport. All anglers, almost without exception, are amiable-and among the votaries of the art, we can enumerate many of the greatest, best, and most distinguished men. The illustrious Patrick Henry, if not the most successful, was at least one of the most persevering disciples of the good old Isaac Walton. No one can tell how much the silent hours of thought and reflection which this great apostle of liberty indulged while watching his cork on the still waters, con tributed to prepare him for the eventful struggle of the revolution.

We shall conclude this article by recommending to our readers a plan by which we believe the fish pond may be made a very great convenience, almost if not as great as the chicken coop itself. Let the fisherman sink a box of convenient length and depth just below the spring, so that the water will flow through it and keep it full. Let the box be covered with a lid of boards sufficiently open to admit the air freely, with hinges and lock for security. Whenever he may take more fish than are needed for present use, he may put them in the box, where they will grow and thrive, and whence he may take them to the kitchen at short notice alive and fluttering, to be dressed for himself, or to regale any friend who may happen to step in unexpected or too late for a regular family dinner.

From the Country Gentleman. INRUMANITY TO ANIMALS PUNISHED BY PROV-IDENCE.

Some poet has truthfully said that-"Man's inhumanity to man Makes countless thousands mourn." Of man's inhumanity and downright cruelty to dumb animals, something equally true and still more severe might be said, and easily sustained For, though there seem to be good reason for thinking that humane sentiments and dispositions towards the dumb creation are beckning deeper and stronger in those who possesse?origi nally the germs thereof by inheritance or constitution, and are being imbibed from the prevailing current of feeling, even by those those who seem ing current of feeling, even by those he seem to have been born with very hard barts, yet still the conduct of a large majority, sows that there is abundant foundation for cusiderably wide and sweeping charges again, man, for inhumanity committed to his care. ity committed to his care. his conduct express those guilty of it, to the interprehension of the more merciful and the fore excellent ones of the earth; and it is an inquiry of no little interest to determine how such persons are regarded est to determine howsuch persons are regarded and treated by a just and merciful Providence. How, then, do Providence deal with those who are guilty inhumanity and indifference to the comfort of those animals which have been committed their care and charge? Those who carreput this inquiry as far as their own observation, aided by those of others, will admit, with the led to the discovery of considerant, which were few sonn to have attended to mit, wil be led to the discovery of considera-tion which very few seem to have attended to relaid to feart. They will discover, for example, that this species of wrong doing and guilt does not scape any more than any other, the just and evere retributions of a beneficent and watchfulGovernorship, which is really kind, even when it unishes with apparent severity. They will fin, to condescend to a few details, that those wo are so inhuman and indifferent to the needs ad comfort of their brute animals, as to let the pick up in the latter portion of the fall part of winter, an insufficient amount of nutrilent from the scanty and frost injured gress's of their meadows and pastures, and in addien, let them be out in the cold and chilly work of impossible to get them through regales hemselves with so great a discacy, rest to artifical ponds or streams. The world his difficult maker on almost every contifully country. There is no region me water than supplied with springs of clear, he sufficiently ours. Wherear here is a sor with your little world with a continuance of insufficient such treatment, with a continuance of insufficient food and shelter through the winter, sheep die, calves become little stunted runts, cows give little or no milk, lambs come still-born or die in a few days, cattle become so week that they cannot do the work that should be done in spring, and damage and losses accrue in other forms beside Want of sufficient food and shelter in fall, winter, and early spring, produces such results. Teams so mal-treated cannot draw a plow put down to a proper depth, and thus the scanty crops, from fields plowed only three or four inches deep, con-

the whole year. Such are some of the ways in which wrongdoing is rebuked and punished, evil-doers warned and called to repentance and reformation, and the superintending watchfulness and regard for rights, justice and mercy, of the Supreme Governor and Disposer of all things vindicated and an acre. A half or even a whole acre would made manifest before the eyes of His intelligent and responsible creatures. Alas! that so many shut their eyes that they see not these retributive providences, nor heed the lessons they were wisely and mercifully intended to teach and in-tinue the providential punishment throughout

Cours.-In handling Colts, the same or more care and good sense should be exercised. Always keep on good terms with the colt, if you expect him to improve in your hands; and do not arouse the devil in him, thinking you can drive it out by violent handling: that is just the way to make baulky and runaway horses, or broken down and mean-spirited ones. Cherish the pride and selfesteem of the colt, but bring him gently to know that you must always be promptly obeyed. Accustom him to sudden noises and movements, in such a way that he will see they will not hurt him. We can almost invariably recognise a country horse in our city streets, by his shying and squatting at every unusual noise or sudden movement, which our well-trained steeds take no
