The Irrepressible Conflict. The New York Herald, of Tuesday, comes to us filled with extracts from Northern papers and accounts of public meetings, all breathing the warmest sympathy for old Ossawatimie Brown, and the bitterest hatred of the South.

One of those meetings—at Tremont Temple, Boston—is reported as having been large and enthusiastic. Mr. John A. Andrew, who presided, thought it proper that the audience "should first unite in a solemn act of religious worship," and to that end invited them to join in prayer with the Rev. Dr. Neale.

The Chairman of the meeting, Mr. John A. Andrew, explained its object. In the course of his remarks, he said: "John Brown and his companions in the conflict at Harper's Ferry, those who fell there and those who are to suffer upon the scaffold, are victims of martyrs to an idea. There is an irrepressible conflict—(great applause)—between freedom and slavery, as old and as immortal as the irrepressible conflict between right and wrong. They are among the martyrs of that conflict. I pause not now to consider, because it is wholly outside of the duty or the thought of this evening, whether the enterprise of John Brown and his associates in Virginia was wise or foolish, right or wrong, I only know that whether the enterprise itself was right, or the other, John Brown himself is right, (Applause.) I sympathize with the man, I sympathize with the idea, because I sympathize with and believe in the eternal right."

The Rev. J. M. MANSING spoke of the act of John Brown as "fool hardy and suicidal." I could not have advised him to it, and yet, now that the event has taken place, I stand before it wondering and admiring—(applause)—remembering that it is some-thing that has been done which was right; and the only question now is that of providing a speaker who destiny; I, my heavenly man, John Brown, a wound in the we may say of as my power As I view it, he in the halls of the great modern Belshazzar, and writing over against the wall those mysterious and appalling words, at which the monarch trembles and turns pale on his throne. While we are here this evening, knowing that our wives—if not present—and our little ones sleep safely in our homes, there are mothers in the Southern States, whom the Providence of God has made the wives of slaveholders, and they are innocent of this great sin of slavery—I wish to believe that they are; they do not mean to be guilty of it; they say that Providence forced them into these circumstances; and these mothers, to-night, as they gather their children around them, offer the prayer that they may be protected from the invader; and they go to bed to-night with weapons under their pillows, knowing that their streets are patrolled by an armed police. This is the condition of the Southern States; verily the tyrant trembles and turns pale in the midst of his revels. (Applause.)

The same gentleman, speaking of the probability that the sentence of John Brown will be executed, adds: "And if he does, and if that event should be observed next year, when it comes round, and so on from year to year, and if half a century hence our children should be rid of this great national curse of slavery, no one will refer, except with pride and exultation, to the battle of Harper's Ferry. (Applause.) And then will come forth some Daniel Webster, then at a safe distance from the event, (laughter and cheers) who will say that from the time when John Brown swung beneath the heavens and the earth-we may date the beginning of the end of American slavery."

The journals in the interest of the slave power ascribe it to a few Northern fanatics, who have roused up the baser passions of men, and they say that we are responsible for the bloody acts of John Brown and his associates. But we say not. The slave power itself, standing up there in all its deformity and wickedness in the sight of Northern consciences—that is the cause (applause), and there the responsibility belongs. Why, the wise man Solomon, who does he say of oppression? He says that it "makes a wise man mad." It makes a righteous man mad, and it will make others like John Brown until it is taken out of the way. It stands there a continual provocation. We cannot resist such temptations while we have the instinct of conscience within us. We shall become men of distinction, like John Brown of Ossawatimie, and Providence will use us to write other inscriptions in the presence of this tyrant.

Mr. Ralph Waldo Emerson, the great New England Philosopher, who imitates Carlyle, said: "It is easy to see what a favorite he will be with history, which plays mad pranks with temporary reputations. Nothing can resist the sympathy which all elevated minds must feel with Brown, and through them the whole civilized world; and, if he must suffer, he must drag official gen-
