Torn Flowers.

From dawn till dark we followed up
The reapers through the wheat,
And tied the rustling corn that lay
Like sunshine at our feet.

Kate laughed with Willie all day long,
And Kate sang merrily;
He said she sang like any bird,
And then she laughed to me.

For Kate he reaped the poppies red
That nodded in the corn;
For me he broke a pale sweet rose,
And pulled away the thorn.

He said the flowers were like her cheek;
My heart was sore all day;
And when he held the rose to me,
I turned my face away.

The blue shades fell; and by the stile
At dusk we sat to rest;
Through tears I watched the angels' wings
That flickered in the West.

They gossipped; and I heard them say,
"Oh, she is never seen
When Kate is near! She slight and pale,
And Kate is like a queen."

And they went gaily by the fields;
And I, to hide my pain,
Slipped from them at the dusky stile,
And went home by the lane.

I heard his step—I would not stay—
And when he came so near,
I felt him breathe—I would not look,
And dried a silly tear.

Then bitterly he spoke. He held
The rose I would not wear;
And I said: "Give it Kate; she twined
The poppies in her hair!"

"Oh, hear me now, below the moon
That watches from above!
I jest with merry Kate," he said,
"But never speak of love."

"And what is Kate between us two?
I love but you alone;
Oh! take the sign, and take my heart;
Since, Love, it is your own!"

I took the rose—a little bird
Sang out a song for me;
And broadly smiled the harvest moon,
Our happy looks to see.

A Romance in Real Life.

In the autumn of 1864 Captain ——, from Abbeville District, S. C., was commanding a company in one of the infantry regiments in Kershaw's division of the Confederate army. He was a great favorite with his command, and had served throughout the war with fidelity and distinction. In General Early's last great disaster in the lower Valley, Captain —— was badly wounded, and was shortly afterwards removed to one of the hospitals in this city. His condition was a very precarious one, and the patience and cheerfulness with which he bore his sufferings attracted the attention of a lady who was visiting the wards. The lady in question, the wife of an estimable citizen, was then about twenty-five years of age. She had been married for some years, and had one daughter, then about five years old. Mrs. —— was exceedingly fascinating and attractive, and an ardent Southerner, having labored unceasingly in contributing to the comfort of our soldiers. All her sympathies were awakened by the sad condition of the wounded officer, and she took him under her own special care. It was some weeks before Captain —— could again be moved with safety, and he was then, with her husband's consent, taken to Mrs. ——'s house. Day after day passed, and Mrs. —— was indefatigable in her attentions. Mr. —— was engaged the greater part of the day in his business, and having implicit confidence in his wife saw without any fear the strong "friendship" which appeared to exist between her and Captain ——. Up to this time Mrs. —— had acted with great candor and sincerity. She was attached to her husband and devoted to her child, and apprehended no danger in finding herself becoming more strongly attached to her patient, and more dependent for happiness upon his society. The relation was simply a "fraternal" one, and with this assurance she quieted any doubts that were excited by the occasional demonstrativeness of Captain ——' manner.

This condition of affairs lasted until the beginning of 1865. Mr. —— thought that his wife's friend recovered but slowly, but his charitable and generous heart would not allow him to make any remark or express a wish for his departure. The little girl, however, was somewhat neglected, and the whole of the mother's time was spent in the company of the wounded officer. At last, in January, 1865, Captain —— was convalescent, and rejoined his command. Mrs. —— seemed relieved by his absence, but soon became dull and low spirited. Still she received letters regularly from Captain ——, and to this her husband made no objection.

In April, 1865, on the retreat of Genl. Lee's army, Captain —— was again wounded, and afterwards taken prisoner. It was stated in the papers that he had been killed, and Mrs. —— seemed almost crazy with grief; but this was still attributed to nothing more than "friendship" and "sisterly regard." After some time it was ascertained that Captain —— was at Point Lookout. He was ultimately released, and, without coming to this city, went to his home, in South Carolina. Mrs. —— gradually recovered her cheerfulness, and was all that her husband could desire until a few weeks ago, when Captain —— arrived in Richmond, and went immediately to call upon her.

Mr. —— was unfeignedly glad to meet his wife's friend again, and invited him to stay at his house. Then the plot thickened! There was no need for Captain —— to remain constantly in the house, but he continued to do so. He declined all introductions that were offered him, and would not go at all into general society. At every hour of the day he was found in the company of Mrs. ——. They played, sang, read poetry and walked together, until Mr. —— became fairly annoyed and his fears aroused. He had no doubt of the wife who had promised to "love, honor and obey him," but he did fear for the peace of mind of the young officer.

The manner and appearance of Mrs. —— gradually changed. Her face became paler and thinner—at one moment her cheeks would be flushed with excitement, and at the next colorless as snow. At one time she would be wildly gay and joyous, and then, a few hours later, be gloomy and despairing, her conduct towards her husband being characterized by the strongest contrasts of warmth and coldness in word and expression. The great struggle between duty and inclination was being fought in her heart, and she knew it not! Her husband was trusting and confident—unsuspicious in his devoted love—while his honor and the integrity of his name were threatened and jeopardized. People at length began to talk, and some unpleasant rumors reached the ears of Mr. ——. He then hinted to Captain —— that his visit had been a long one, and on Monday, 11th instant, the Captain left his house with the expressed intention of returning to his home in the South.

Mrs. —— became moody and reserved. She would not allow her little daughter to be near her, and treated her husband with coldness and contempt. It was noticed that she went out a great deal in the evening, but no particular attention was paid to this, and her husband endeavored in every way to soothe, by his love, the sorrow whose cause he did not then suspect or comprehend.

On Monday last Mrs. —— told her husband that she was going out to spend the evening with a friend, and he promised to call for her at about 9 o'clock. He hurried up town, and was punctual to the hour, but found to his surprise that his wife had not been to the appointed place. Not even then did he suspect the sword that was suspended over his head! He went home, learned that his wife was still out, and walked into the nursery, when his little daughter put her arms around his neck, crying, Pa! where is Manma? I do want my Mamma. Poor child! where, then, was your mother? Could not your voice ring in her ears and turn her back before it was too late!

Mr. —— comforted his little daughter as well as he could, and was then handed a note which had just been left at the door by a servant. It contained but a few words, but when it had been read the happiness of his life was gone, and a brave, strong heart was crushed with despair. Only a few words:

"I am not guilty, but I have deceived you, and I cannot any longer act a lie. I trusted to myself, and had rather heap sin upon sin than admit my fault. You will never see or hear of me again. Hate me, despise me—anything, but do not let my innocent child learn to blush for her mother."

Mr. ——'s first impulse was to track his wife, kill her, and then kill himself; but there was still the poor child crying, amid her tears, "Where is dear Mamma?" and he resolved to make one effort to save her upon whom he had showered all the rich treasures of his love.

Folly and crime naturally travel north, and on Tuesday morning Mr. —— left for Washington by the Fredericksburg railroad in pursuit of his wife and her "friend." His mind was torn by doubt and uncertainty, and it was a relief to his suspense when he disembarked at the Federal capital. On the wharf he heard some men talking, and intuitively stopped. They were speaking of a lady and gentleman who had come up on the night boat. They said that the lady and gentleman appeared to be very friendly at first and walked up and down the forward deck very quietly. After awhile, however, they seemed to quarrel, and high and bitter words passed between them. Mr. —— listened with intense interest for the end of the story, and asked in a careless tone what became of the quarrelling pair. "Why, sir," said the man, "just as soon as they got to the wharf a lady jumped into the 'Metropolitan' omnibus, and the man—plague on his rudeness!—took a hack for the Baltimore depot."

Mr. —— thought the plan was deeply laid, but drove to the Metropolitan Hotel and registered his name. He then went to his room, but had not been there five minutes when a servant knocked at the door, and with a very significant look, said that a gentleman in the parlor wanted to see him. Mr. —— went down, opened the door, and in a few moments his wife, sobbing passionately, was lying at his feet. His first impulse was to cast her from him, but she clung to him in desperation, and implored him to stay. Her words were broken and strange:

"Husband—for God knows I may call you so—I was mad, mad, mad! He told me that I must not stay; he said he would be a brother to me, and I, fool like, believed him. I did love him. Husband, for God's sake do not leave me; do not drive me to ruin! When I left our house I dared not kiss our child—I dared not! I knew not what I was doing; and on the cars, before we had been an hour gone, I thought I heard our child's voice crying, Where's mamma! I do want my mamma! It nearly killed me. He was respectful, tender at first, but on the boat he—insulted me grossly; still he is but a man. I left him—left him at once—and came here! Husband! do what you will with me! Kill me if you will; curse me; I deserve it all; but God knows that I am not altogether lost. Speak to me—do speak to me. Oh, do not look so strangely—so strangely." She fainted.

During the whole of Wednesday and Thursday she was delirious, and then unveiled all the secrets of her heart. Mr. —— was constantly with her, and saw how ingeniously and systematically her pure thoughts had been perverted and changed. He listened to every word she uttered, and when at last she regained her senses, he could kneel and return thanks that he could take back the wife of his heart—the mother of his child—to his home, without incurring the shame or reproach of a merciless world.

Mr. and Mrs. —— returned to Richmond on Friday evening last, and from the lips of an intimate friend we heard this too true tale precisely as we have narrated it. Names of course are suppressed, and the principal purpose of its publication is that it may serve as a moral and warning to others. The conduct of Mr. —— may possibly be condemned, but only those who are without fault have a right to condemn him; and surely in the eyes of Providence it was better to be merciful and forgiving than to drive a weak woman, by harshness and cruelty, to a life-time of crime and shame, and an eternity of suffering and remorse.—Richmond Dispatch.

Pointed Preaching.

Father Moody was an eccentric man. He had in his congregation a Colonel Ingraham, a wealthy farmer, who had kept back his large stock of corn from the market in hopes of raising the price. The pastor heard of it, and resolved to make a public attack upon the transgressor. One Sabbath he read for his text, "He that withholdeth the corn, the people shall curse him; but blessings shall be upon the head of him that selleth it." Prov. xi. 25. Colonel Ingraham could not but know to whom reference was made, but he held up his head, and faced his pastor with a look of stolid unconsciousness. Father M. went on with very strong remarks, became still warmer, and touched the colonel still more closely, who, however, still held up his head, apparently determined not to feel. At last the preacher lost all patience and cried out, "Colonel Ingraham, you know that I mean you; why don't you hang down your head?"

WEST'S IMPROVED PUMP.

Anti-Freezing, Double-Acting, Forcing and Lifting.

THESE PUMPS have now been in general use, a number of years, and give better satisfaction than any other, and are recommended as

THE BEST!

By CAPTAIN ERICSSON, and other eminent engineers. We can refer to thousands using them, and guarantee that all will recommend them. They are more simple in construction, and work easier, and cost less than all others.

"Our readers will find the double acting, improved Pump of J. D. West & Co., one of the best in market. It is very simple, works to a charm, so that any child may use it; throws a steady, continuous stream, and does not freeze in the coldest exposure, and is unusually cheap. We say this knowingly, and give the testimony of our own accord, without the knowledge or request of the proprietors."—N. Y. Evening Post, July 1st, 1863.

J. D. WEST & Co.—We are pleased to state that the Pumps we had of you, about a year ago, have been in constant use, 12 hours each day, and raise for the use of our woolen factory, about one hundred and fifty gallons per minute. They work with but little power, compared with pumps we have used before, and do not get out of repair, and are satisfactory in all respects.

DUNLAP MANUFACTURING CO."

SOLON ROBINSON TO THE FARMER'S CLUB, JAN. 23: "No Farmer who owns a well or cistern can possibly afford to be without an iron pump. It should be at once a suction and force pump—a perfect little engine—such a one known as 'West's Improved Pump.' I speak of this pump, because I happen to know it to be very simple, durable, powerful and cheap, and it dont freeze up nor get out of order once a year. I know this and think I may be doing the farmers good by speaking of it. A boy ten years old can work it, and throw a continuous inch-and-a-quarter stream. It can be made to work in deep wells as well as in shallow ones."

GREAT NECK, L. I., 1861.

"I have used this Pump for one summer and winter, exposed to the northwest wind; coming over Long Island Sound, being the coldest possible exposure, and at no time did it freeze, nor were we unable at any time to pump water with great ease.

H. B. McILVIAN."

"The undersigned having used West's Improved Pumps, cheerfully recommend them as simple, durable and powerful in raising and throwing water, and for their ease of action, security against frost, and low price, we believe them superior to all others.

WARREN LELAND, Met. Hotel, N. Y.
J. W. POMEROY, Yonkers, N. Y.
JOHN MESSERAU, N. Y.
DOMINICK LAWRENCE, Winchester."

From the New York Observer.

"We have had in use for months past one of West's pumps, which has given us more satisfaction as a force and lifting pump than any we have ever used. It is one of great power, and well adapted for ship's decks, mines, factories, greenhouses, graperies, etc. The Mining Chronicle and Railway Journal says: It is recommended for its extreme simplicity of construction, great strength and consequent durability and cheapness of repair. There is no stuffing box—the pressure being held by a cup-packing like upon the working-piston, working in a cylinder, fitted for the purpose within the upper air chamber—which we think a great movement, as stuffing is so liable to be deranged and leak under strong pressure to say nothing of the loss by friction incident thereto. It has also two air chambers—thus the action of the valve is cushioned upon both sides by air—preventing water-hammer and vacuum-thump. The valves are very accessible, and simply and cheaply repaired. They work easier than any pump we have ever seen: the 4 inch cylinder being worked by children in wells one hundred feet deep, and as they are extremely cheap, as well as simple and strong, we freely recommend them."

"CAMBRIDGE MINE, N. C., June 25, 1866.

J. D. WEST & Co.—Gents: The Pump which I ordered for our mine is received, and put to work in our underlay shaft, which we are sinking. We find that one man will with ease, lift fifty gallons per minute. We lifted in three and a half hours all the water in the shaft, which measures even twelve feet and thirty feet deep, and it was full when we commenced. It answers our expectations in every respect. It will do great service with but trifling expense for repairs. Yours, respectfully,

BURR HIGGINS."

"This may certify that I have been using at my manufacture for the last four years, West's Improved Pump. I now have in use, three of said pumps, one of which is kept constantly at work 24 hours of each day, (except Sundays,) and has been running for the past two years. I pronounce them unhesitantly, the best pumps that have been brought to my notice, having used many others previously. They are simple in their construction, and not easily disarranged.

New York, Oct 12, 1863. JAS. A. WEBB."
