To His Excellency James L. Orr, Governor of South Carolina:

Sin: - I have the honor herewith to trans mit to your Excellency a brief sketch of the history and resources of South Carolina. The emigrant, when he has determined to quit the home of his fathers, will look for that regiou which offers him most chances of good health and prosperity. Our noble old State may safely invite investigation and compari son, and to facilitate this, these pages have been written. What is here stated is based upon historical and official data, and believed to be strictly and honestly true. The under signed, bimself a foreigner by birth, of thirty four years' residence in the State, sincerel believes it to be so: and to remove all doubt it is my intention to call a public meeting of the foreign residents of Charleston, and invite their strict investigation and confirmation or

There is no place in the world where all men are equally fortunate, or where there is no trouble, disappointment nor distress there is no clime where there are no ills, and where man lives forever; neither can Souti Carolina lay claim to such great blessing: but there are few regions which are her equalnone that are her superior. If your Excel lency approve of them, let these pages go forth, and let all interested judge fairly and determine for themselves.

I am, most respectfully, your Excellency's obedient servant,

JOHN A. WAGENER. Charleston, So. Ca., 22d March, 1867.

Notwithstanding the lateness of the hour and our inability to do justice to General Wagener's able paper by any one or more ex tracts, we cannot well omit the following allu sion to the character of the people of this State, which, we doubt not, will meet with general approval:

CHARACTER OF THE PEOPLE.

This is a part of our subject which I ap proach with great diffidence. To judge of the general character of a people, requires not ouly an intimate knowledge of them and their history, but an 'mpartial and totally unbiassed mind, rigidly determined to applaud what is good, and freely to condemn what is bad. The knowledge of the people of South Carolina and of their history, I believe I possess; but I must candidly confess that I am so much inclined in their favor, and have entertained for many years such an exalted opinion of their character and worth, that I mis trust myself, and would very much rather have had another do this portion of my work. Indeed, I would rather have an enemy of South Carolina portray them, if he was a true man and just.

As a law-abiding and orderly community. South Carolina can have no superior; and to her the report of Hon Mr. Peters, the great agriculturalist of New York on the condition of the South, peculiarly applies, that "here ever been, and property and persons quite as safe; and that in none of the other States of lasted eight hours and resulted in driving the Imperialists from some of their positions. the Union-not excepting any-are the people better protected, or the laws more impartially enforced."

As a liberal and enlightened community, South Carolina can fully compare with old Virginia, the home of Washington and Jefferson. The European emigrants that look to the American continent for a home for their children, should never forget that there was a state himself as the Governor of the Territory. On the route to La Paz, Dartois enlisted a few of the adherents of Navarrette. He time, not many years ago, when in the North and West the spirit of fanaticism was rampant against them, burning their churches and schools, and endeavoring with all its might to exclude them for a long term of | went to La Paz and attacked the house of the twenty-one years from every political right and privilege, and that it was democratic South Carolina that was one of the strong pillars of their projection, and that never ceased for a moment to proclaim in the coun cils of the nation, that this is a country of equal rights, and a refuge for the distressed and oppressed of all peoples.

On the Savannah there is a monument for the Polish hero, Pulaski; on the Santee there is a monument for the German hero, DeKalb; and never is the great day of Carolina's glory, the anniversary of Moultrie, commemorate without a grateful allusion to the Irish hero, Jasper.

As a religious community, South Caroline can proudly refer to her hundreds of Churches, that point their spires to heaven from her hills and dales everywhere. And not in pharasaical self-righteousness, but with the truly Christian liberality that knows no difference lutions of the Richmond Convention. It was whatever in sect or creed, but appreciates the good in sil. As a prosperous and progressive communi-ty, South Carolina, although having every element of wealth within reach of her grasp, is just now in a less happy position than might be desired. This must be candidly confessed. But at the same time, the causes thereof may be as candidly indicated, and effective remedy suggested. Heretofore, the State relied for her prosperity exclusively upon the rich results of her agricultural pursuits. Her system of African
