Going Up and Coming Down.

- This is a simple song, 'tis true-My songs are nover over-nice—
 And yet I'll try and scatter through
 A little pinch of good advice.
 Then listen, pompous friend, and learn,
 Never to boast of such renown, For fortune's wheel is on the turn, And some go up and some go down.
- I know a vast amount of stocks, A vast amount of pride insures; But faith has picked so many locks, I wouldn't like to warrant yours, Remember then, and never spurn
 The one whose hand is hard and brown; For he is likely to go up, And you are likely to go down.
- Another thing, you will agree—
 The truth may as well be confessed—
 That "cod-fish aristocracy," Is but a soaly thing at best;
 And though the fish is large and strong
 May seek the little ones to drown,
 Yet fishes all, both great and small,
- Are going up and coming down. Our lives are full of chance and change, And change, you know, is never sure And 'twere a doctrine new and strange That pieces high are most secure. And though the fickle god may smile, And wield the sceptre and the crown,
- Tis only for a little while—
 That B goes up and A comes down.
- This world for you and me, my friend, Hath something more than pounds and Then let me humbly recommend A little use of common sense.
- Thus lay all pride of place aside,
 And have a care on whom you frown For fear you'll see him going up, When you are only coming down.

A THRILLING ADVENTURE. The following thrilling sketch is from an English Magazine:

"Father will have done the great chimney to night, won't he mother?" said little Tommie Howard, as he stood waiting sudden joy after such great fear had for his father's breakfast, which he carried to him at his work every morning.

" He said that he hoped all the scaffolding would be down to-night," answered the mother "and that will be a fine sight; for I never like the ending of those great chimneys; it is so risky for father to be the last up." "Eh, then, but I'll go and seek him, and help 'em to give a shout afore he comes down," said Tom. "And then," continued the mother,

"if all goes on right we are to have a frolic to-morrow; and go in the country, and take our dinners, and spend ail the day in the woods."

"Hurrah!" cried Tom, as he ran off to his fither's place of work, with a can of milk in one hand and some bread in the other. His mother stood in the door. watching him as he went merrily whistling down the street, and she thought of the dear father he was going to, and the dangerous work he was engaged in; and then her heart sought its sure refuge, and she prayed to God to protect and bless

Tom, with a light heart, pursued his way to his father, and leaving him his breakfast, went to his own work, which was at some distance. In the evening, on his way home, he went around to see how his father was getting on.

James Howard, the father, and a number of other gentlemen, had been building one of those lofty chimneys, which, in our great manufacturing towns, almost supply the place of other architectural beauty. The chimney was one of the highest and most tapering that had ever been erected, and as Tom shading his eyes from the slanting rays of the setting sun, looked up in search of his father, his heart almost sank within him at the appalling height. The scaffold was almost down: the men at the bottom were moving the last beams and poles. Tom's father stood alone at the top.

He then looked around to see that everything was right, and then waving his hat in the air, the men below, answering him with a loud cheer, little Tom shouting as loud any of them. As their voices died away, however, they heard a different sound, a cry of alarm and horror from above. "The rope, the rope!" The men looked around and coiled upon the ground, lay the rope, which before the scaffolding was removed, should have been fastened to the chimney for Tom's father to come down by! The scaffolding had been taken down without remembering to take the rope up. They all knew it was impossible to throw the rope up high enough, or skillfully enough, to reach the top of the chimney, or if it could, it would hardly be safe. They stood in silent dismay, unable to give any help or think of any means of safety.

And Tom's father. He walked round and round the little circle, and the dizzy height seemed more and more fearful, and the solid earth further from him. In the sudden panic, he lost his presence of mind, and his senses failed him. He shut his eyes and felt as if the next moment he must be dashed to pieces on the Turning to Eve, he asked her what she to a New York "drummer." The merground below.

The day passed as industriously as usual with Tom's mother at home. She was always busily employed for her husband in some way or other, and to-day, she and she thought it was no harm to learn coats, he would say to him that he had a had been at work harder than usual getting ready for the holiday to-morrow.
