sighs,
O'er hopes that blighted early, faded fast;
I raise to Heaven no complaining cries,
As memory to the present brings he past. The poetry of love, sweet love, I know, Long since its cares and disappointment knew;
As shadows did they come, as shadows go, I've been in sunshine, and in shadow too. I know the hand, the great Almighty hand. That moves the mighty universe it made;
Blotted the fair designs ambition planned,
And in the grave my earthly treasures laid.

Wisdom can see the end, and wisdom The better why I did not care to know; Showed me my path way and my life work too, When in the dust she laid my idols low. Showed me a cross, the cross that I must bear, Nor e'er when weary, wayworn, lay it down;

decay, Must be so desolate and so forlorn. I took the cross, the heavy cross with dread,
To love, ambition, hope, I bade adieu, Henceforth a cross to bear, a path to tread, Urborne, untrodden only by a few. A change has come, a pleasant, happy I scarce know when it came, I scarce know how; Tis like some mystery both deep and strange, The cross is changed, the way not tiresome now. 'Tis still the way, the straight and upward way, A narrow and at times a thorny road; The cross though lighter still I bear each day, And 'neath its weight am climbing up to But there are flowers, fair sweet-scented flowers, Scattered along the pathway that I go; Me thinks they drop from Eden's sunny bowers, They do not bloom on earthly sod I know. Some buds, sweet buds, just ready now And full blown roses on my path are strown, Love's roses these and those the buds of Which bud and bloom in Paradise alone A bow, the bow of promise spans my sky,

The Small Worries. The Christian world has long been guessing what Paul's thorn in the flesh was. We have a book that in ten pages tries to show what Paul's thorn was not, and in another ten ges tries to show what it was. Many of the theological doctors have felt Paul's pulse to see what was the matter with him. We suppose the reason he did not tell us what it was, may have been because he did not want us to know. He knew that if he stated what it was, there would have been a great many people from Corinth bothering him with prescriptions as to how he right

Some say it was diseased eyes, some that it was a humped back. It may have been neuralgia. Perhaps it was gout, although his active habits and a sparse diet throw doubt on the supposition. Suffice it to say it was a thorn-that is, it stuck him. It was It was probably of not much account in the eyes of the world. It was not a trouble that could be compared to a lion, or a boisterous sea. It was like a thorn that you may have in your hand or foot and no one know it. Thus we see that it becomes a type of those little nettleome worries of life that exasperate the spirit.

Every one has a thornsticking him. The house-keeper finds it in unfaithful domestics; or an inmate who keeps things disordered; or a house too small for convenience, or too small kept cleanly. The professional ons or calls for "more copy." Th bbath-school teacher finds it in intentive scholars or neighboring achers that talk loudly and make a great noise in giving a little instruction. One man has a rheumatic joint which, when the wind is northeast, lifts the storm signal. Another, a business partner who takes full half the profits, but does not help to earn These trials are the more netlesome because like Paul's thorn they are not to be mentioned. Men et sympathy for broken bones, and mashed feet, but not for the end of sharp thorns that have been broken off in the fingers. Let us start out with the idea that we must have annoyance. It seems to take a certain number of them to us humble, wakeful, and pray To Paul the thorn was as dislinary as the shipwreck. If it is ot one thing it is another.
