Is the tempest 'round thee raging? Do the angry billows roar? Is there darkness all about thee

Did thy summer friends all leave thee. In adversity's dark night? Christ was laft alone on Calvary.

Has the heavy hand of sorrow Falln on thy drooping head?
Hast thou wept beside the dying?
Hast thou mourned above the dead?
Then, oh, trust Him!

There is yet a bow of promise Bending 'neath that far off sky There's a dazzling rift of sunshine

There is still the "Rock of Ages," Everlasting arms beneath : Cling to that poor, earthly pilgrim
In thy hours of deepest grief,

One of the cases before the Mayor yesterday morning was that of Rufus Reed, colored, who was charged with an affray with Sella's little elephant, and the facts brought out at the trial proved that the fight between the elephant and the man was a severe one and that the man whipped the elephant. Reed had been giving the elephant a few apples, handing it all except one, which he put in his vest pocket. While his attention was turned the elephant re ched out its trunk and, getting hold of Rufus's pocket, tried to pull the apple cut tearing the vest nearly off before the wearer's attention was turned to the the apple away from it, but the elephant drew its trunk from Reed's ands and swinging it around gave Reed a terrible blow on the side of the head. Reed drew back and felled the elephant to the ground with a blow from his fist delivered over the offer eve. The elephant's keeper then attacked Reed and Reed knocked him down. In the meantime the elephant had regained its legs and gave Reed now thoroughly exasperated and sc tually knocked the elephant over on its back and then left the tent.
