AERIAL COMMUNICATION.

Wireless telegraphy is no longer an experiment but a pronounced successso The Italian inventor, Marconi, who discovered and developed the system, has received a message a distance of 1550 miles, while on board a vessel in mid-ocean. That he actually received the message as sent is attested by the Captain and chief officer of the vessel on which the receiving instrument was located.

The installation of the submarine cable marked a new era in electrical development. Soon its abandonment will mark the beginnig of still greater achievements in the application of this subtle The installation of the subapplication of this subtle force or energy. The aerial or wireless system is certain to supplant the present means of interocean communication, being operated so much cheaper the cable companies can not compete with it.
