

"POOR DIGESTION LANGUID AND TIRED."

(An Interesting Letter Concerning Pe-ru-na.)

Miss Della Janveau, Globe Hotel, Ottawa, Ont., is from one of the oldest and best known French Canadian families in Canada. In a recent letter to The Peruna Medicine Co., of Columbus, Ohio, she says:

"Last spring my blood seemed clogged up, my digestion poor, my head ached and I felt languid and tired all the time. My physician prescribed for me, but a friend advised me to try Peruna. I tried it and am pleased to state that I found it a wonderful cleanser and purifier of the system. In three weeks I was like a new woman, my appetite had increased, I became buoyant, light and happy and without an ache or pain. Peruna is a reliable family medicine."

Adia Brittain, of Seattle, W. writes: "After using your wonderful Peruna three months I have had great relief. I had indigestion, heaviness in my stomach, was bilious, and had fainting spells, but they have all left me since using Peruna."

Two fluttering bits of gauzy green, that by untoward flame to-night Art rudely summoned from a scene that for some days had shed delight On thy small senses—what has been Thy profit from this sunny world, Ere into darkness and oblivion hurled?

The Vigilance Committee.

By W. R. ROSE.

It was a moonlight night and the roadway shone white and clear between the straggling fences. A number of men, a dozen, perhaps, were coming up the hill from the village in the valley with its twinkling lights. They were busy talking as they advanced. Presently they paused at a gateway and crowded a little closer. The house within the yard was old and weather beaten. It was a story and a half building. There was a porch along the front with two windows beneath it, one for each side of the door. Through the window at the left shone a faint and flickering light.

The group of men at the gate lingered irresolutely for a few moments, talking in eager whispers. Then a tall young man with a smooth and kindly face broke from the party and led the way up the gravelled walk to the front door. When he reached the little porch he paused and held up his hand. Then he turned to the window through which the faint light flickered and went in.

That Abner Moxham was a hard man nobody in Winterfield doubted. He was unscrupulous. He was close in his dealings. He lived quite alone in the old cottage on the south hill. He was old and lean and yellow, and his sixty years had touched his hair with white, and filled his lean cheeks with wrinkles. He cared nothing for the matters that interested the villagers. He took no interest in politics nor in public improvements, and very little in religion. Occasionally he would stray into the white church whose steeple was the tallest in the village, and sit quite by himself through the service. Then he would hurry away without a word to his fellow worshippers. The young pastor had called on him once, but it was not believed that he had presented the subject for a vigilance committee's attention. When a social duty of this sort was under consideration a rope was usually at hand where it could be found when wanted.

Upon you in a neighborly way with the desire of proffering such aid as you may require. They have been worried and even alarmed by your non-appearance in the village, and are here because they felt it was high time that they asserted their humanity. We are not a demonstrative people in Winterfield. We act slowly, but when we do act we are thoroughly in earnest. And I speak for each member of this committee, sir, and for all the village, too, when I say that if there is ought we can do to help you in any way you can command us to the utmost limit of our resources."

He paused and the old man slowly nodded. "Thank you, Mr. Browning," he said, "and I thank you all gentlemen. But at present there is nothing I need. Should any occasion arise, I will be glad to call upon you." And his head dropped again over the child. There was a moment's pause. "Good night, sir," said the tall young minister. There was a little murmur of good nights behind him. "Good night and my thanks," said the old man. And the Winterfield vigilance committee passed out. It was the young pastor who broke the silence as they strode down the hill. "We have misjudged this old man," he said. "I believe I am free to say so. It was a dreadful domestic calamity that brought him to this state. It humbled his pride, it crushed his ambition. He crept away here to hide his wounded soul. And yet he has not entirely forgotten his fellow creatures. A great institution for the care of child waifs flourishes in the city through his liberality. And I hold in my hands a goodly sum for the benefit of our village poor, a thank offering for the recovery of his daughter's child. Yes, that's her child. And under Providence I fervently hope to see it the means of drawing him back among his fellow men." He paused and half turned. "Oh, my brethren," he said, "never let charity lose its place in your hearts."

TEA-ROOT CARVINGS. The fantastic wooden objects from the Far East are made. The fantastic wooden objects which come from the Far East and are known as tea-root carvings have long been the basis of a prosperous industry in the populous city of Foo-Chow. Strictly speaking, the name is a misnomer. Some of the carvings are made from the populus tree, and some from the yew, but the vast majority, nine-tenths at least, are made from the roots and trunks of hard wood trees.

Fad for Linen Waists. A good story, says Dry Goods Economist, was told during the week by a prominent buyer who also runs a work-room in connection with a waist department. There had been a lot of handsome linen sheets and embroidered shams lying about the store for untold years. These were French importations, and the first had been marked at $65 the set, then to $60, and so down the scale until they reached $35, yet still they were not disposed of.

HER ADVANTAGE. "Oh, dear," said little Harold's mother, who was having a touch of the common trouble, "I seem to ache all over." "Well," said her sweet child, "I am sorry, but not as sorry as I'd be for father if he felt that way." "Why would you feel more sorry for your father, love?" "Cause there'd be such a lot more of him to ache."—Chicago Record Herald.
