

THE KANGAROO GIRL.

Her features are peachy, her eyes are bright,
Her lips are for kisses that clasp and woo,
Her neck is a carving of creamy white,
But Why Does She Walk Like A Kangaroo?

Her hair is a midnight of maddening joy,
Her form is a Psyche's, and swains would sue,
And Cupid would capture, the wise young boy,
Except That She Walks Like A Kangaroo!

Her mother, I think, doesn't know she's out,
For mothers are wise and discreet and true,
And if they but knew what their girls are about
Not One Would Thus Walk Like A Kangaroo!

Robertus Love in Judge.

After the Honeymoon.

Husband—My dear, are you not courting trouble by being so friendly to this young man?
Wife—No, my dear. I have already married it.—Meggendorfer Blatter.

His Shrewd Idea.

"Who is the sour looking girl with the heavy underjaw?"
"That's the only daughter of old De Milyuns."
"And who is the dainty bit of sweetness with the blue eyes and golden hair?"
"That's the chaperon."
"What's the explanation?"
"Why, it's old De Milyuns' clever idea. He thinks his Jane will be perfectly safe as long as Miss Blossom is around."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Equine Repartee.

"Those lovmaking couples always hire you to draw their utter sleighs?" remarked the truck horse.
"Yes," laughed the old white nag, "but it seems to me instead of being attached to a sleigh I belong to an automobile."
"Automobile? Why so?"
"Well, when I draw those lovmaking couples ain't I a 'sparking plug'?"
And the horse laughs that echoed through the stable awakened the drowsy hostler.—Chicago News.

Friendly Advice.

"If I ever marry," said the bachelor who was beginning to be old, "I shall be careful to pick out a lady whom I can treat as my equal."
"Oh, say, old chap," answered the married man, "I wouldn't do that if I were you. I can tell you from experience that a woman who would submit to such treatment wouldn't be worth saving around the house."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Why He Ate It.

"Jane, there was a whole pie in the pantry. What became of it?"
"My young man called on me last night, ma'am."
"And did he eat all that pie?"
"He was forced to, ma'am. There was so very little variety to choose from, ma'am."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Neighborly Inquiry.

"My husband never falls when he leaves home in the morning to kiss me goodby."
"Don't you ever have the fear that his heart may not soften enough during the day to make him come back again at night?"—Washington Star.

Possible Breakdown.

Pearl—Her father heard she was going to elope in an automobile, and he was furious.
Ruby—Indeed!
Pearl—Yes; he said automobiles could not be trusted. Advised her to elope in a cab.—Houston Post.

Wanted—An Opportunity.

Young Wife—Don't you admire a man who always says the right thing at the right time?
The Spinster—I'm sure I could if I ever have the pleasure of meeting such a man.—Chicago News.

Why Else?

She—Why do they refer to locomotives as "she?"
He—I suppose it's on account of the trains they drag.—Chaparral.

Undoubtedly.

"Why, oh, why, are some people so strenuous?"
"Because some others are so shiftless."

FOR THE CHILDREN

The Black Cockatoo.

There is a wonderful cockatoo in one of the islands of the Indian ocean near New Guinea. It is as large as a full grown pheasant and is of a jet black color. The bird is remarkable for its immensely strong bill, and the clever manner in which it is used. The bill is as hard as steel, and the upper part has a deep notch.

Now, the favorite food of this cockatoo is the canary nut, but there is wonderful ingenuity required to get at it, for the nut is something like a Brazil nut, but it is ten times as hard. In fact, it requires the blow of a heavy hammer to crack it. It is quite smooth and somewhat triangular in shape.

Nature appears to have given the possession of the wonderful bill some intelligence to direct its powers, for the cockatoo takes one of the nuts edgewise in its bill and by a carving motion of its sharp lower beak makes a small notch on it. This done, the bird takes hold of the nut with its claws and, biting off a piece of leaf, retains it in the deep notch of the upper part of the bill. Then the nut is seized between the upper and lower parts of the bill and is prevented from slipping by the peculiar texture of the leaf.

A sharp nip or two break off a tiny piece of the shell of the nut. The bird then seizes the nut in its claws and pokes the long, sharp point of its bill into the hole and picks out the kernel bit by bit.

His Reason Why.

Once upon a time a learned doctor had a foolish servant, who always went with him to visit the sick. One day he was called to the bedside of a very ill patient, and after examining the man the doctor said that he had been eating oysters and that he must stop or he would die. When they left the house the servant asked the doctor how he knew that the sick man had been eating oysters.

"Because," said the learned man, "I saw the empty shells under the bed."

Some time after this the doctor was very busy, and a call came for his immediate service. In his stress he sent the servant to visit the patient, who was very bad, just to tell him that he would come as soon as possible. The servant arrived, and, as he had frequently heard his master do, he asked numerous questions; then, as his eyes wandered about the room, he said, "Sir, you may die, for you have eaten a horse."

"How dare you?" exclaimed the man's wife, and in anger she drove the fool out.

When the doctor called he was told that his services were no longer required and the reason given. He hurried home and questioned the servant. "Why were you such a fool?" he asked.

To which the servant replied, "I knew he had eaten a horse, because I saw the harness under the bed."

"Greyfriars Bobby."

An interesting monument has been erected near Greyfriars cemetery, Edinburgh, by the late Baroness Burdett-Coutts, in memory of a dog's devotion. This dog followed its master's remains to the cemetery in 1858; from that day and night after night for thirteen years it guarded the grave and only left it to visit a restaurant near at hand for its dinner. At the fire of the 1 o'clock gun from the castle Bobby left the grave and returned immediately after a hasty meal at the restaurant. On Sundays he dined from scraps laid in a certain place by him on Fridays and Saturdays.

He died in 1872. The facts are well authenticated and were reported prominently in the newspapers during the dog's lifetime.
