I had a large bottle of Chamberlain's following the directions for an hour

AMBER SHADE OF SHANTUNG

Cool Summer Coat: Dress of That Material is Most Valuable Addition to the Wardrobe.

This example illustrates a cool summer coat-dress of fancy shantung in a dull amber shade, with a waist sash in a lovely fuchsia-colored ribbon and a trimming of little buttons covered to correspond. Straight sleeves are set in at a long shoulder line, and slit up at the base for the egress of kilted lace ruffles, a similar ruffle oc-curing at the throat, while a fill-up is supplied in a tiny cross-over vest of white net, ornamented with web buttons covered with the gold shantung.

It will be remarked that the tunic is of Russian persuasion, while the skirt has a panel movement back and front, the sides gathered in a few slight folds, close at the hem, into these, at the right side in front and the left at the back.

SASHES LINED WITH COLOR

Give Just the Right Touch of Relief to the Always Popular Black and White Combination.

Women who like to be distinct from their neighbors are returning to black and white as an admirable combination for street as well as house wear, and one of the bits of color that they allow themselves is to line the sash.
This lining shows in the loose ends more than anywhere else, but as the sash is not drawn closely around the body, it shows up attractively in fleeting glimpses at the side and in front.

One of the exclusive methods of making a one-piece frock that is to have a sash is to drop a broad panel of the material, finished with a heavier fabric at the edges, from the shoulders to knees. Across this goes the sash, not at the waistline, but below the hips, and the whole effect is quite slim and girlish.

The black satin model that is made in this manner has its sash lined with white satin and run through a three-inch loop of the material in front, just above the waistline. The sash drops down from that to ten inches below the waistline in the back and is not spread out across the hips, but allowed to hang in careless folds.

When a black sash is lined with king's blue or Vatican purple, the effect is good, although it does not have the distinction of the white lining, but after all that may be merely a matter of personal opinion and many women may prefer the touch of brilliancy.

In Paris they are lining these sashes with striped Roman silk and Scotch plaid, and this idea promises to be brought out in thin cloth suits for autumn, such as, for instance, a raven blue gabardine one-piece frock with a sash of self-colored satin lined with dull red, blue and black plaid.

Sleeveless Coats.

Some curious sleeveless coats are being worn. These are taken over back and front like scapulars, but they are not cut on quite such straight lines. The sides are entirely cut out until toward the hem, where the back and front are continued round to button over and meet each other. A belt, which is often of black satin and matches the collar, holds the coat down at the back, then passes under the material, showing again at the sides, and is continued over the front.

To Clean Canvas Shoes.

Oxide of zinc is the simplest and most economical cleanser for canvas shoes. Mix a quantity of the powder with water to make a thin paste. Apply with a small brush, rubbing in thoroughly, and let dry before wearing.

The Family Cough Medicine.

In every home there should be a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery, ready for immediate use when any member of the family contracts a cold or cough. Prompt use will stop the spread of sickness. S. A. Stid, of Mason, Mich., writes: "My whole family depends upon Dr. King's New Discovery as the best cough and cold medicine in the world.
Two 50c bottles cured me of pneumonia." Thousands of other families have been equally benefited and depend entirely upon Dr. King's New Discovery to cure their coughs, colds, throat and lung troubles.
Every dose helps. Price 50c and $1.00. All druggists. H. E. Bucklen

CHANGING THE TOPOGRAPHY

Giant Steam Shovels Slicing Off Sides of Big Hill to Improve the Capital.

"Reminds me of pictures of work done on the Panama canal," said a man with his hands deep in his pocket and an air of leisure. A giant steam shovel, grating and hissing and grinding and crunching, was scooping out a cartload of yellow clay every time it bit into the earth. With a rattling of chains and bolts and levers it would drop its spoil into one of a train of railroad dump cars. Three little but strong locomotives, black, grimy and greasy, puffed and panted busily up and down steep grades hauling these dirt trains. Small rails on cross-ties a yard apart were crookedly laid over the land.

The scene was big with motion and industry. A feature of this was that around the place of this great activity are rows and rows of homes, blocks of apartment houses and lines of street cars. Crowds of men, whose engagements do not seem to be pressing, gather to watch the toilers at their task. These workers are making over a large piece of the topography of Washington.

This work may be called the Zoo or Rock Creek Park entrance, but it includes other projects than the provision of an adequate inlet and outlet to the Rock Creek Park area, though the building of this park entrance is itself a gigantic piece of engineering, excavation and filling.

Where Columbia road, the Avenue of the Presidents and Mount Pleasant street intersect you will see on the west an extensive tract of raw, cloddy earth, either freshly cut away or freshly dumped in, and many perches of broken bluestone that have been hauled there to find final use as a dressing (or is it metal?) for the broad roadways that are building.
From Columbia road and from Mount Pleasant street near their junction a large section of land, generally unbul-t, stretches westwardly to the tree-grown heights that drop down into the valley of Rock creek on the east side of the Zoo grounds.

A wide, bare clay avenue leads westwardly down grade, cutting through the side of an oak-timbered hill on the north and on the south filling part of the ravine or vale through which Quarry road leads, or led, till the level of the new street is higher than the roofs of the houses that face on Quarry road.

Lanier street has been filled across the Quarry road ravine and connects with the avenue building to the Zoo.
Eighteenth street has also been filled across this ravine, shutting in a deep hole many of the familiar houses along Quarry road, the outlet from which is now by means of a new and romantic, steep and crooked little street called Summit place.

The new park entrance after slicing off the side of a big hill enters the valley of Quarry road obliquely and at the point of contact with Eighteenth street an extensive high-uptilted plaza is forming. From this point the new way is building down the line of old Quarry road, whose bed is being buried 40 feet, it may be 50 feet, under mountains of dirt dumped by trains into this once picturesque vale.

Up on the highland and running west from Mount Pleasant street is being cut through a new street called Hobart.

It is a big piece of work and thousands of fascinated persons who live in that neighborhood or stray in that direction gather to watch its progress.

IS A THING OF THE PAST?

Curios of the Post Office Department Are Transferred to the National Museum.

The Postal museum, which formerly attracted thousands of sightseers to the postoffice department, is a thing of the past. Some time ago the dead letters, curios and other postal relics representing the accumulation of a century, together with a comprehensive exhibit of mail equipment and transportation facilities, were assembled and catalogued at the direction of the postmaster general and transferred to the New National museum. The postage stamp collection of the United States government, which formerly occupied the third floor corridor of the postoffice building, has been removed to the Smithsonian Institute.

The American stamp collection is more complete than any owned by other governments, and its value is conservatively estimated at half a million dollars. Practically every issue of postage by the nations included in the international postal union is represented by all or nearly all denominations, as there is an arrangement between the postal administrations of those countries for the exchange of specimens of all new issues of stamps.

The issues of nations not adhering to the international postal union are naturally incomplete, but a large number of stamps illustrating parts of those issues are included in Uncle Sam's collection. Every issue of the United States government since 1847, the year the first American stamp appeared, is complete with the exception in all of about ten specimens.
This is probably the most complete set in existence, and many entire issues are in duplicate.

Two private collections of stamps exceed the American government collection in size and value. The first is owned by a French nobleman, and the second belongs to a resident of Chicago.
