

and how it all came about we do not know, but the fact is that those same women who did all these spectacular things have been given the desire of their hearts. That is the way men do everywhere. They say they will not and look very stern, but if they think the women really want it they repent and let them have it. So the English gentlemen have not only provided the ballot, but from last accounts have handed over in a silver waiter, the highest office in the gift of the English people, to a lovely woman, and that a seat in the English Parliament, and in the face of four objections; that she was first of all a woman, wealthy, and an American, and a prohibitionist, and another objection might be that her husband is an American and recently made a member of the House of Lords.

Judging from the action of the great organizations of women they have every assurance that the 19th Amendment will be speedily ratified for they have ceased to retain their departments for suffrage propaganda, and are now calling it the League for Women Voters. Everywhere citizenship schools are being established, and women are studying not politics in its perverted sense, but the science of government. There is such a school at the University of South Carolina. These are a sample of what they are studying: Who are our municipal leaders? What are the laws on our books for the government of our town? Are they being enforced? If not, what can we do to improve conditions? They are making these things personal as related to their homes and their children.

Frances Willard made an address favoring the ballot for women in our capital city of Columbia twenty-five years ago. She was a pioneer who is honored for her leadership in the temperance reform, and bore during all her courageous career the stigma of being a believer in suffrage. She was remonstrated with by her friends and denounced by her enemies for her belief in so radical a measure. It is very significant that on her statue in Statuary Hall, Washington, are inscribed these words which were a plea for the ballot for women, and which for years stood a silent entreaty to the Congress of the United States:

"Ah, it is women who have given the costliest hostages to fortune. Out into the battle of life they have sent their best beloved with fearful odds against them. Oh, by the dangers they have dared; by the hours of patient watching over beds where helpless children lay; by the incense of ten thousand prayers wafted from their gentle lips to heaven, I charge you, give them power to protect along life's treacherous highway those whom they have so loved."
