

Source of Money For Campaign Cause of Worry.

Washington, June 27.—Where to get the money to finance the campaigns of the big parties this year is a question that is causing not a little of interest, speculation and doubt in the minds of those who are familiar with the fact that it takes money, much of it, to keep the game going from a nominating convention to election time.

During the past week one of the big features in connection with candidate Harding's campaign conferences has been where to get the coin. Harry Daugherty, his campaign manager, and the man who must know when and where to get the sinews of war, has been here conferring on this matter, as also has been Col Roosevelt, son of the late president; friends of the late George W. Perkins, the man who contributed liberally and lavishly to the Roosevelt campaign, and others, all directing their minds in one direction.

There is no longer a Mark Hanna "barrel," and even if Hanna were living there are cogent reasons why there would probably this year be no Republican funds. One reason is that of late congress has formed a very embarrassing habit of poking its nose into the doings of the two big parties. Democrats investigate the doings of the Republicans and the Republicans in their turn put their smelling committees at work on the least provocation to get something on the Democrats. So there you are. Nobody wants to be investigated.

Old Days Easy.

In the days gone by it was easy for big monopolistic concerns throughout the country—the big trusts—to contribute liberally with good prospects for favors in return but now it isn't so any more.

Congress in both branches is working overtime smelling out for something rotten in political Denmark, but the present financial and economical situation here—where everyone is hunting the profiteer—makes the big monied concern very geechy about coming through with the coin. There are statistics on file with congress where, in years gone by, the strong financial concerns of the country made no secret of contributing magnanimously to Republican slush funds. But such days are no more.

The big concern which would now give $50,000 or $100,000, to a campaign fund at this time would probably be jerked up by its corporation heels almost before the ink on its check was dry because there would immediately arise the assumption that something, and this very naturally—would be expected in return. The element of profiteering would be much too prominent for the general good.

Stingy With Information.

This is about the plan which will be followed, although now Candidate Harding's managers are as stingy with information as a tramp would be with a new ham bone; contributions will not be asked in large amounts. They will be solicited in small denominations for two reasons. One is that there must be no semblance of big money from the money trusts—which would indicate a lot full of profiteers—and the other is that with the aforesaid congress members poking about here and there it would certainly spell defeat for the Republicans should there be a repetition of the Wood and Lowden slush fund stuff. That killed both of these worthy candidates even before the doors of the big coliseum at Chicago swung themselves open, none know it better than the corps of Washington newspaper men who were on the job.

The ghost will walk, of course, but there will be on prancing about all dressed in the finery of big dollar marks. This year he will do his midnight hour graveyard stunts in his usual quiet way and watch it he will be there with the goods. There will be no big, dazzling bunches of the old time Hanna stuff, but, on the contrary, thousands and thousands of small contributions from persons too small and insignificant for the congressional nose to ferret out. The money will count, however, all the same, and money—plenty of it, is what the bigwigs in the two big parties are looking for now.

R. F. Erwin Regarding His Troubles

"A year ago last winter I had an attack of indigestion followed by biliousness and constipation. Seeing Chamberlain's Tablets so highly recommended for stomach troubles I bought a bottle of them and they helped me right away" writes R. F. Erwin, Peru, Ind. If you have any trouble with your digestion give these tablets a trial. They will do you good.
