offered such volumes of romatic incident as the deck of the old-time Mississippi steamer. In the old days before railroads traversed the continent in every direction, and the west was a wilderness, New Orleans was the Mecca of travelers, and the fleet wave-born palaces of the inland sea carried thousands of pleasure-seekers to the south. It was then that life was a carousal, and men and women gave themselves up to most lavish enjoyments. Gaming was a custom, and courage an instinct. Men were as prone to brawls as the sparks to fly upwards. Conspicious among the fierce and rollicking habitues of the steamers was Captain West, a noted duelist. One day he engaged in a controversy with a gentleman whom he met on deck, whom he accused of staring at him impertinently.

"Why do you look at me so intently?" demanded the captain.

"I was not looking at you," calmly replied the stranger, his eyes meanwhile fixed in a stony glare upon the duelist's face.

"But you are, sir!"

"I am not."

The captain turned away, but a short time afterward he felt those stony eyes were again upon him and following all his movements with pitiless ferocity. It became inexpressibly annoying, and the captain at last determined to make an end of it. Stepping up to the stranger, he inquired, with suppressed passion: "Can you fight as well as look?"

"Perhaps so. I never tried it.

Place me, however, in position, and I will do my best."

"The singular conduct of the stranger had by this time attracted universal attention, and whispered conferences regarding his remarkable appearance agitated little groups of persons all over the boat. In a short time, however, the vessel rounded to at a landing for wood, and then the parties to the impromptu duel went ashore. The stranger was led off by a Negro servant, who seemingly picked his way. Indeed, from the intense interest he was manifesting in the encounter, the colored servant was apparently more deeply interested in the affair than his master. But the time allotted for preliminries was brief, and the men were speedild put in position, and pistols placed in their hands.

The word was given, and two ringing reports flashed out on the aiy. Captain West fell pierced to Protracted Meeting.

I take great pleasure in writing about our protracted meeting at Union church. It began on the 9th of August and lasted until the 17th.

It seemed that our people came at the very beginning of the meeting with full purpose of heart to accomplish that great end of having a blessing richly poured out upon them. They hungered and thirsted after a blessing, and in the word of God we have the promise that he shall be filled; thank God! we were filled with the grace of God in our souls. Give me the religion that will go down into the heart and purge it of all hatred, malice, envy, and evil doing; and then we will take pleasure in working for Jesus

I fear one of the greatest draw backs in the church today is, there is too much religion in the head and not enough in the heart. I pray that the Lord may give us all more
