The Iron and Braham Cowpeas Necessities Where Wilt and Root Knot Occur

In all of the places visited in the wilt infested sections of the State we have found root knot very prevalent. In fact ro t knot and cotton wilt seem te go hand in hand. Where one occurs the other is nearly always found. Either trouble is bad enough by itself, but where they both occur they freenently destroy whole crops of cotton and cowpeas.

Root knot is caused by small mematodes (eel worms) which boro into the roots of the plants and irritate the tissue, causing enlargement of the points attacked. These enlargements vary in size from almost nothing to the size of a pea and sometimes even larger.

When cut open and examined under a microscope these knots are found to be full of the tiny nematode worms. These live over the winter in the old roots and in the soil, and begin work again the next spring in the young roots. If the crops that they live on are kept off the land for several years, the nematodes are starved out.

We get rid of the root knot then by rotation; i. e. we grow on the infested land only those crops on which the nematodes cannot live. Corn, oats, wheat, rye, Iron-cowpeas, peanuts and velvet beans are safe crops to use in such rotation. Sweet potatoes, cotton, cowpeas, tomatoes, okra, cucumbers, watermelons, beans, tobacco, and a number of other crops are subject to root knot and are not safe to plant on infested land.

Wilt is caused by a parasitic fungus which grows in through the roots of the plants into the stems and plugs up the vessels which transport food and water back and forth to the different parts of the plant. When these vessels are clogged up the plant wilts and dies. The fangus which causes the trouble live in the soil and will remain alive for a number of years even when cotton and peas are left off the lands. The only way to control wilt is by the use of resistant varieties, varieties which are almost wilt proof. The varieties of cotton which are resistant to wilt, however, are by no means free from root knot encourages wilt because the fung s which causes wilt easily enters the roots through the wounds made by the nematode worms. The first step then in controlling wilt is to get rid of the root

Now the odinary farm practices which are followed in this State tend to encourage both wilt and root knot. In the fi.st place, the wilt which attacks cotton and page is practically the same, and the root knot which is common on cotton, peas, potatoes and tobacco is exactly the same. Cowpeas which are used in every imaginable rotation are subject to both of those troubles which prove so disastrous to cotton, so where we use the common varieties of cowpeas in our rotation we are encouraging both of these diseases. There are two varieties of cowpeas, however, which are free from both roet knot and wilt. These varieties are the Iron and the Brabham; and it is with the view of calling attention to these and emphasizing the necessity for their more general use that this article is written.

The South Carolina farmer cannot farm without cowpeas, yet where wilt and root knot occur he cannot grow the common varieties; and it is not safe for him to plant them even where they do make some growth, because they encourage the same disease of cotton.

It is wise then to secure and grow the varieties which are resistant to both of these diseases-the Iron and the Brabham varieties. These varieties are quite generally grown in some sections of the State, but are still anknown to many farmers who are badly in need of them. There is a great demand for pure seed of these varieties now, which demand is sure to increase; so it behooves all who have these varieties to plan to save all the seed possible. No other variety of cowpeas should be need on any farm where wilt or root knot occur.

A good rotation to practice where wilt and root knot occur is to follow cotton with corn-planting Iron Brabham cowpeas, in the corn. Follow the corn with oats or wheat, then sow the stubbla in Iron or Brabham peas. After the peas, sow rye as a winter cover crop and plow it under before time to plant cotton the next spring. H. W. Attempted Assault.

Bamberg Herald, 23rd.

Tuesday afternoon there was brought to Bamberg and lodged in jail a negro boy named Lee Jones, with the horribie crime of attempted assault upon a little white girl, sixteen years old, the daughter of a prominent farmer who lives near town. The child is very small for her age, having been afflicted all of her life,

The negro was brought to town by the father of the child; which shows a respect for law and that he was willing to let the fiend be dealt with according to law.

Some time Tuesday the child started to go to a neighbors house, and she had to pass through a small patch of woods on the way. While passing through the woods the negro attacked her, but her screams and resistance frightened him away and he did not succeed in accomplishing his foul purpose. The girl made a vigorous defense, and in the struggle she was not hurt but badly excited and her nerves upset. As soon as the negro fled she returned home and told her parents, she recognizing the negro, and he was soon arrested at his plow in the field, which he had left to attack the child The negro worked on the plantation of this gentleman, and had been fed from his table. At first harsh measures were advocated, but the mother of the child pleaded that her husband not stain his hands with the blood of the brute, and finally the negro was brought to Bamberg by the father and turned over to the authorities. It is said that he confessed to the crime as soon as he was arrested, and he will no doubt meet the death penalty for his
