Warehouse Bill Continued.

Senator John L. McLaurin asked that his warehouse bill be continued until next session and made the following explanatory remarks:

"To deny that I am disappointed that the House has continued the warehouse bill to the next session would be untrue, but I am in no way surprised. This measure is one of international importance, affecting finance in every civilized nation of the world. It is more far-reaching in its effects than I even declared in the address which I delivered a few nights ago in this chamber, for in the application of the trust principle to handling the cotton crop you accept the trust as a necessary and component part of our complex system. You lay down the fundamental doctrine, not of the destruction of all trusts, nor yet the puerile dogma of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Standard Oil and Tobacco cases of 'good trusts' and 'bad trusts,' but of Government regulation of trusts and of making each and every trust, subservient to the best interest of this nation and all the people thereof.

"The great movements of the masses of the people in all times has been not so much from intellectual and moral effort on the part of students and thinkers, as of being driven by stern necessities. The Barons did not wring Magna Charta from King John from the consideration of abstract questions of political economy, but because the exactions of autocratic Kings left them no other recourse. The great reformation of Martin Luther was not brought about by the letters of Erasmus, but because of the tyranny of the Church of Rome drove Luther into open rebellion.

"Last year no one realized so keenly as I that the warehouse bill was not understood and passed this General Assembly, because cotton was below the cost of production, and not reason, but the spur and whip of poverty drove men into making desperate experiments. For the first time, it is beginning to be understood, that there is a road which we can take, and not only cross the Red Sea, but if need be overwhelm the hosts of Pharaoh.

"I hope it will not be necessary, but my friends, I know something of the 'Money system' of the United States, and our feeble efforts in curtailing acreage, etc., are like pitching straws against the wind. The press, politicians, and all the powers that serve the mammon of greed will encourage us to waste our vitality and expend our energy in vain effort, there is only one way, and I have pointed it out. Time will do the rest. When October comes and it suits those who hold our financial destiny in their hands, to pluck three hundred million dollars from the cotton crop of the South, and we are helpless, then you will find the appointed way."
