The Itching Palm. Hurrah for cash! Every sensible man holds it in high esteem. It is pleasant to acquire it, satisfactory to possess it, delicious to spend it. But the very hard cash obtained at the sacrifice of every comfort and enjoyment that gives zest to life, is the dearest of all the whistles for which fools pay dear. Perhaps this bit of proverbial philosophy may be considered someweat musty; but there never was a time when its enforcement was more needed than now. The idea of a first-rate business man in this era of push seems to be that of a man who never rests-a commercial Nimrod who is always in the saddle, bags the spoils of the chase at a gallop, and never allows himself any intermission for refreshment. This is the sort of mercantile phenomenon that is presented as an example of youth. School-masters talk of him to their pupils as a model for imitation until the latter despise kites and peg-tops, and pine to try their arithmetic in a diamond-cut-diamond contest with the lightningcalculators of the "bank note world." If a youngster fails to see that money-getting is the chief end of man, he is stimulated with the recital of the wonderful success of some Cræsus of the day. "Look at Graball," my son, says paterfamilias; "he's worth millions—yet he began with no-thing. Go thou and do likewise." True, Graball works and always has worked harder than an Irish hod-carrier; true, the more money he makes the faster his anxieties multiply, and the heavier his labors become; but then, although his wealth is of no more real use to him than if it belonged to another, look what a commanding position it gives him in the finan-cial world! Bah! what is that worth? Does it draw toward him the sympathy or the affection of any living soul! Is it an equivstent for the social enjoyments for which a life of sordid pleasure has unfitted him, or for the pleasure he might have derived from the exercise of the ennobling tastes and faculties which he has neglec-Such men should be pointed out as examples to be avoided; and while thrift, energy and perseverance are insisted on as the main elements of worldly success, due weight should be given to the fact that great wealth is of no real value to persons without mental and moral cultivation. In the nands of an enlightened philanthropist like Peabody, it is a blessing to the possessor and to society. In the hands of an unprin--cipled schemer, it is generally a -curse to both .- New York Sunday Times.

THE PRIBE OF ACRES.—The bane of agriculture in one half of the Republican is the idea that a man who owns four hundred acres is prosperous as one who owns and tills one hundred. As a general pratice, Southern and Wetern farmers have depended on a hundred acres plowed three inches probably four times as rich and deep, for three thousand bushels of corn, when the same store could have been gashered from fifty deres plowed six inches deep, and well manared,
